Wary eye being kept on Mt. Baker

Times News Services

The eruptions of Mount St. Helens in southwest Washington have prompted a fresh look at the Mount Baker volcano in the northwest part of the state, officials said Friday.

A Mount Baker information committee, formed in 1975 after 10,778-foot peak showed increased activity, has been reactivated, it was announced.

The committee is made up of representatives of the U.S. Forest Service, Puget Sound Power & Light Co., the U.S. Geological Survey and University of Washington, said Forest Service spokesman Joe Nadolski.

Nadolski said aerial observers were sent to Mount Baker Friday and reported that steam activity in Sherman Crater on the mountain's summit appeared to be normal. The volcano regularly has been emitting some steam from fumeroles — steam vents — in the crater.

Seismologists at University of Washington reported their instruments did not indicate any increased activity at the mountain, he added.

In Vancouver, Wash., meanwhile, tourist officials are complaining the fallout of bad publicity from Mount St. Helens, which has calmed again after its third major eruption in a month, is almost as bad as the ash.

Hotel operators say their bookings are down as much as 50 per cent, mainly because travel agents can't sell complete tour packages to wary tourists.

"We're getting killed," said Gary Walker of the Seattle-King County tourist bureau. "And it's not an ash problem. It's a public relations problem.

"No one has any conception of where the mountain is. As far as they are concerned, Mount St. Helens is in the middle of Seattle."

But as industry officials protested what they call exaggerated reports of the effects of the eruptions Thursday, the volcano in southwestern part of the state spewed steam and ash again.

And scientists echoed their earlier remarks — words to pierce a tourist guide's heart — that Mount St. Helens could keep belching for years.

Pete Rowley of the U.S. Geological Survey said volcanos typically continue to erupt, but become progressively less violent.

Seismologists at the University of Washington said earthquake activity under the mountain was continuing to decline.

Halfway around the world, however, in Santa Cruz de Tenerife, in the Canary Islands, intense volcanic activity has been registered in the Spanish Canary Islands, scene of devastating eruptions in the last 500 years, the Geophysical Centre of the Canary Islands reported.

The report said despite seismic activity, the risk of eruption was slight.

B.C. will go it alone

Bennett turns down aid from feds for coal line

Premier Bennett announced today the province will go-it-alone on a coal deal with Japan, turning down a multi-million dollar grant from the federal government.

This means B.C. and Japanese coal buyers will have to pay the $300 million cost of a spur railway line from the Sukunka coal field to the main line of B.C. Rail.

At stake is a sale to Japan of 5.4 million tonnes of metallurgical coal plus one million tonnes of thermal coal from the field in the northeastern corner of the province.

Japan has said it wants a deal signed by midnight Sunday and the decision today means the deadline can be met.

Bennett did not give any reason for rejecting the federal offer, nor did he list the conditions Ottawa had attached to the grant.

The premier said it was unfortunate that the CNR would not be building the line but said the job could be done by the province, through B.C. Rail.

He said he hoped Ottawa would keep an earlier commitment to improve port facilities at Prince Rupert in connection with the plan to export coal from that city.

He made the announcement following a four-hour provincial cabinet meeting at the Airport Inn in Richmond.

Bennett had ordered the cabinet meeting after Industry Minister Don Phillips completed a series of meetings with federal officials during which Ottawa's terms for the CNR building the line were spelled out.

Ottawa at first offered $70 million toward the 115-kilometre rail spur, then increased the offer to something under $300 million, but attached conditions that were never made public.

Apparently the provincial government was unhappy either with the offer or the conditions, or both.

The provincial government had estimated the cost of the spur line at $215 million but Ottawa said it would be $300 million.

Senator Ray Perrault said the federal government was unhappy that it was unable to reach a binding agreement in talks with Phillips.

Perrault said he had understood Phillips had the power to sign a binding contract but Phillips said the issue was so important it had to go to a full cabinet meeting.

SEARCH LIGHT for Fort Rodd arrived Friday but it won't be used for it's original task, searching for enemy ships and planes. The light had been stored in Ottawa awaiting completion of restoration work on Fisgard Lighthouse at the national historic park in Colwood. The light, one of the original type installed at the fort, was first used about 40 years ago.

Fishing trip fatal for boy

The body of a seven-year-old boy who drowned in Langford Lake Friday night was recovered by Colwood RCMP early this morning.

A police spokesman said the boy left his home on Leigh Road near the lake at 6:30 p.m. to go fishing.

His mother grew worried when he didn't return home and, after a frantic search, called police at 10:10 p.m.

Police located the boy's body at 1:30 a.m. in four to five feet of water beside a pier near the public boat launching site at the south end of the lake.

Police said the boy was a non-swimmer.

Police are withholding the boy's name pending notification of his father who is out of town working in the Parksville area.

Trudeau 'sneaking' tax: Clark

RICHMOND (CP)—To pay off its deficits, the federal Liberal government is trying to sneak in discriminatory taxes that will hurt British Columbians and the poor, Opposition Leader Joe Clark said Friday.

Clark, in a speech to the general meeting of the B.C. Progressive Conservative party, said the natural gas tax planned by Ottawa will cost B.C. residents $300 million, or $120 for each citizen next year.

He called the natural gas tax divisive and discriminatory because it would affect B.C. but would not be imposed on most other provinces.

"It's a nice little trick by Mr. Trudeau; Ottawa gets the money, the British Columbia government gets the blame and the B.C. consumer pays."

Clark said his party opposed a natural gas tax as a government and still opposes it.

The former prime minister said elimination of indexing of income tax deductions would also hurt lower-income families the most.

He said he knew British Columbians were frustrated by an inability to make their vote count in the last federal election — no government MPs were elected west of Manitoba.

Pension protest rally Monday

The public sector employees' protest of proposed pension changes storms into Victoria Monday, leaving cancelled ferry runs, closed liquor stores and limited government service in its wake.

The B.C. Government Employees Union (BCGEU) expects at least 90 per cent of its 10,000 members in the city will walk off the job in the afternoon.

About 4,000 are expected to take part in a rally which will begin at 1 p.m. in Centennial Square and wind up on the legislative lawns.

However, others who would be affected by the changes, including municipal employees - members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees - and teachers, will not be participating in an organized manner.

Representatives of local teachers' associations will take part in the rally but the teachers will remain in the classroom.

They have been asked to express their concerns in letters to the government.

The Victoria rally, the last in a series which began May 30, will coincide with the resumption of the current legislative session after a week's break.

Ferry workers at Swartz Bay will hold study sessions during the day raising havoc with the daily schedule.

The B.C. Ferry Corp. gives the following breakdown of what to expect:

— The Tsawwassen terminal will be closed from about 10 a.m. until 2 p.m.;

— The 11 a.m., 11:45 a.m., noon, 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. sailings from Swartz Bay to Tsawwassen will be cancelled;

— The 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. sailings from Tsawwassen

Woodward's video pitch

VANCOUVER (CP) — Woodward's employees throughout B.C. are being shown a video-taped message from board chairman C. N. (Chunky) Woodward which says the department store could be destroyed if it gives in to demands by striking food floor em)loyees in Victoria.

"We would become noncompetitive and that would threaten the survival of the food floors and the jobs of over 1,200 food floor employees in B.C. and indirectly the survival of the whole company," Woodward said on the tape.

Any company that has tried to provide significantly higher wages and benefits than its competitors has soon gone out of business, he said.

"He's talking about Apocalypse Now when all we want is 20-minute rest periods and staff discounts," countered Bryan Denton, secretary-treasurer of the Retail Clerks Union, local 1518, which went on strike two weeks ago after negotiations for a first contract broke down.

Woodward's has offered the Victoria clerks the same contract that covers workers in other major supermarket chains, but it does not include the 20-minute breaks or the discount.

The union is also seeking to achieve seniority for part-time employees. Three-quarters of the staff work fewer than 25 hours a week and cannot enjoy all fringe benefits, Denton said.

Pros fined going for 'green'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver-area golfers have paid at least half a million dollars extra for equipment because golf professionals conspired to keep prices up, B.C. Supreme Court Justice Thomas Berger said Friday.

He made the comment in imposing fines of $40,000 on the Canadian Professional Golfers Association and $10,000 on its B.C. branch.

The two associations pleaded guilty to conspiring to maintain the prices of top lines of golf clubs and balls — a violation of the Combines Investigation Act.

"The Crown estimates that as a result of the scheme by the two associations, Lower Mainland golfers paid a million dollars more than they would have under free competition," Justice Berger said.

"It is, of course, impossible to know precisely at this stage what the losses were, but I think it fair to say they were at least half a million dollars."

He said that the defence had agreed to the penalties, which might have been heavier except that the practice ended three years ago. The offences occurred in the 10 years prior to December 1977.

"Golf may be only a game, but it was real money that was obtained from the public for a decade," the judge said.

Toronto lawyer William McMurtry, acting for the golfers, argued there was no intention on the part of the pros to break the law.

CPGA members are golf professionals making on average about $19,500 a year from salary and instructional fees and equipment sales.

Crown counsel P. W. Halprin told the judge that estimates of the retail sales of pro line golf equipment in 1976 in the Vancouver area totalled almost $2 million.

Halprin said the association restricted advertising by members and under threat of discipline, suspension and expulsion under the bylaws prevented or lessened competition.

More killings, aid to IRA — expelled Libyan warns

LONDON (AP) — A Libyan diplomat ordered to leave Britain promised Friday that more Libyans will be murdered and his country will help Irish terrorists if the British government "continues to support Libyan criminals."

Musa Kusa, head of the Libyan diplomatic mission in London, said Libyan exiles in Britain are criminals. He spoke to reporters after being summoned to the foreign office where he was informed by Deputy Foreign Secretary Sir Ian Gilmour he must leave the country within 48 hours.

Two exiles have been murdered in London and others have been killed in Western Europe for opposing the Libyan regime of Col. Moammar Khadafy.

Kusa said: "We believe strongly that the British government supports them by all means, giving them security, giving them hiding places and giving them cars.

"If the British authorities keep taking this action against the (Libyan) Revolutionary Council and help the other side, I expect they (the Libyan regime) will help the IRA again. We believe the IRA is the British liberation movement, so according to this principle, we have the right to support them."

More than 2,000 people have been killed in Britain and Ireland in the last 10 years as the underground Irish Republican Army has fought to end British rule in Northern Ireland.

British and Irish police sources say the IRA has already had help from Lused to smuggle guns into Britain.

Gilmour said it was impossible for Kusa to stay after he publicly expressed approval of a plan to kill two more Libyan exiles opposed to Khadafy's regime.

British authorities say they want to stay friendly with Libya but will crack down on embassies suspected of using diplomatic immunity as a cover for terrorism, gun-running and drug-smuggling.

O.A.P. to $191.28 July 1

OTTAWA (CP) — Basic old age pensions will rise July 1 to $191.28 from $186.80, the health and welfare department announced Friday.

A department statement said the guaranteed income supplements and spouse's allowance will also go up in July, to compensate for increases in the cost of living.

The new income supplement rates includes the extra $35 for each household Parliament passed last month for poorer pensioners.

The maximum guaranteed income supplement will rise to $192.03 from $153.35.

A pensioner receiving the maximum supplement on top of the old age pension will get $383.31 by July 1.

The maximum guaranteed income supplement for a married couple, both pensioners, will increase to $148.07 each frm $127.51.

The maximum spouse's allowance rises to $339.35 from $314.31.

to Swartz Bay will be cancelled;

— The 11:50 a.m. and 1:10 p.m. runs from Swartz Bay to Fulford Harbor on Salt Spring Island will be cancelled;

— On the Swartz Bay-Pender Island-Fulford Harbor route, the 11:30 a.m. sailing from Swartz Bay and 12:30 p.m. run from Pender will be cancelled;

— The 9:45 a.m. sailing from Swartz Bay to the outer Gulf Islands will also be cancelled.

Liquor stores will be closed in the afternoon and other government operations and services, such as motor vehicle inspection, will be either shut down or delayed.

The BCGEU estimates there are 144 government work sites in Greater Victoria and the impact will likely be felt at all of them.

Employees handling essential services will remain on the job at Wilkinson Road jail, as well as at Glendale, Tillicum and Oak Bay lodges.

The message delivered at the rallies by BCGEU leaders as well as Jim Kinnaird, president of the B.C. Federation of Labor, has been the same.

The public sector employees are unhappy with the proposed changes and the manner in which the government is going about implementing them.

If the government does not back off, there is the hint of a general strike.

BCGEU president Norm Richards said at a Vancouver rally last Tuesday that if the government does not agree to a meeting before June 20, the union will hold a special comference to plan further actions.

He refused to specify what that action would be.

The BCGEU, backed by the federation of labor, has been up in arms ever since the government introduced legislation which would increase pension contributions and limit protection against cost-of-living increases.

The amendments would increase employee contributions by five per cent and limit indexing to eight per cent a year.

Previously benefits were based on what the experts call "open-ended indexing," meaning that benefits rise on a percentage basis along with the Consumer Price Index.

The government defends the move saying the intention is to protect the pension plans from being under funded.

If some action is not taken, indexing will reduce the financing of the public service plans to the point that future benefits would have been reduced rather than increased, government spokesmen say.

Meanwhile, the latest shot in the pension plan war has been fired by BCGEU assistant director Bob Moore.

He describes as shocking, the decision by the government to run newspaper ads this weekend explaining the need for the changes.

"We have been waiting over a year for the government to respond to our request for a meeting," he said.

Lougheed 'not optimistic' on oil agreement by July 1

HALIFAX (CP) — Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed said he foresees a "serious constitutional and economic crisis this summer" if no new oil pricing agreement is reached with Ottawa, adding "I pray I'm wrong."

Lougheed said Friday he is "not optimistic" an agreement satisfactory to his province will be reached by the time the existing one expires July 1. However, he declined at a news conference to specify what Alberta might do in that event.

Alberta Energy Minister Merv Leitch, in talks next week with Marc Lalonde, the federal energy minister, may or may not come to a deal. If no deal is struck "then I'll get involved," Lougheed said.

However, he reiterated in a luncheon speech that Alberta would have to reassess continued production and sale of light and medium crude oil because production "has peaked."

While Lougheed was in Halifax, LaLonde announced in Ottawa Friday that Alberta had rejected an interim deal that would have provided a $2-a-barrel increase and run only until Oct. 1.

The current Canadian price of $14.75 a barrel compares with a world price of $32. Alberta wants prices to rise to 85 per cent of the U.S. oil price and 85 per cent of that for natural gas. It would drop gas prices to new Canadian customers to 65 per cent of oil prices, he added.

The Alberta premier said there could be changes to parts of the package deal reached with the previous Tory government in Ottawa, but the net benefits to Alberta would have to be the same.

He said the oil-pricing agreement negotiated with the former Clark government was fair to Alberta and the rest of Canada. He said this agreement could be the basis of a new agreement.

While in Halifax, Lougheed offered assistance for energy and fisheries projects in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland and took with him the support of the Progressive Conservative premiers of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland for the position his province is taking on a new oil-pricing agreement.

In discussions with the premiers, Lougheed said his province would be interested in participating in the development of a coal mine at Donkin in Cape Breton. But this would only be done if the coal would not compete with Alberta coal.

Meanwhile, in Edmonton, Provincial Liberal opposition leader Nick Taylor says Lougheed and Newfoundland Premier Brian Peckford are both suffering from an illness brought on by the discovery of oil.

In Peckford's case the illness is in its initial stages but will get worse as Newfoundland develops reserves estimated to total between 50,000 and 100,000 barrels a day, Taylor said during a news conference Friday.

He said the discovery changes a whining premier who demands money from the rest of the country into an oriental potentate overnight, adding Lougheed is in the advanced stages of the disease.

Levesque 'eager' for election

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec Premier Rene Levesque has told Parti Quebecois members to prepare for a fall election.

"I'm ready and eager to fight," Levesque said at a special meeting today of the party's national council held to evaluate the May 20 referendum loss.

The premier told the 400 delegates and observers to start organizing immediately for nomination meetings which could be held by the end of September in Quebec's 122 ridings. Under redistribution, the number of seats in the national assembly has been increased from its former total of 110.

But while Levesque told the delegates to prepare for an election in the fall, he added that the vote could be held in early 1981, saying that he wants to allow "certain events to unroll" before deciding whether to call the election in the fall or the spring.

Cartoonist stricken

STAMFORD, Conn. (UPI) — Cartoonist Ernie Bushmiller, who created the comic strip "Nancy," remained in critical condition today in Stamford Hospital after suffering an apparent heart attack.

Bushmiller, 75, a Stamford resident and native of the New York City, was admitted to the hospital's coronary care unit Friday, a nursing supervisor said.

In 1925 Bushmiller took over the comic strip, "Fritzie Ritz," about the antics of a New York socialite. In 1940 he renamed it "Nancy" after the mischievous little girl who Fritzie cared for.

Total ban on shellfish for coast

VANCOUVER (CP) — Shellfish harvesting has been banned until further notice on all beaches along Canada's west coast.

The ban is a precautionary move imposed because conditions are ideal for a red tide bloom and scientists have found high concentrations of paralytic shellfish poisoning, federal fisheries department spokesman Rudy Haugeneder said Friday.

The ban applies to filterfeeders such as clams, oysters and mussels.

Haugeneder warned it is impossible to visually detect contaminated shellfish which can cause illness within 30 minutes to four hours after eating.

Symptoms include numbness or tingling of lips and tongue, spreading to fingers and toes, followed by loss of muscular co-ordination and finally paralysis and inability to breath.

Victims are advised to induce vomiting, take a laxative, drink a solution of baking soda or baking powder and get medical attention as quickly as possible.

One death has been blamed on the red tide so far this year.

N-power not needed - Bennett

TRAIL (CP) — B.C. doesn't need a nuclear energy industry, Premier Bill Bennett said Friday at the official opening of the Seven Mile Dam project in the West Kootenays.

"There is no need for nuclear power in this province and there need not be, as long as we can continue to develop that most acceptable and cleanest of power sources, hydro-electric," Bennett said.

The dam, located 22 kilometres southeast of Trail on the Pend d'Oreille River, is B.C. Hydro's latest power project and took five years to complete at a cost of $460 million.

The first of the dam's four generating units began feeding power into Hydro's grid last December. The second was installed in March.

The concrete dam, with an ultimate generating capacity of 810,000 kilowatts, is 65 metres high, with a crest length of 335 metres.

Progress — but no fish pact

VANCOUVER (CP) — Week-long discussions between Canada and the U.S. on a new reciprocal salmon fishing pact ended Friday with both sides saying agreement is near — but not near enough to form a treaty.

Dr. Michael Shepard, leader of the Canadian team and Dr. Dayton Alverson of the U.S. delegation, agreed to meet again in the fall — the third session since the talks started in Juneau, Alaska, in May.

They are trying to conclude a draft agreement on the salmon fishery to present to their two governments before the end of the year.

Shepard and Alverson told a news conference at the wind-up of the talks Friday that significant progress had been made toward equalizing the numbers of salmon taken by each country.

The talks are aimed at limiting the number of interceptions — salmon spawned in one country, but caught by fishermen in the other — of increasing dwindling salmon stocks and and developing a long-term plan to ensure each country's harvest is equal to its own production.

Canadian fishermen were not pleased at the direction negotiations have taken.

"Basically it's another sellout of our West Coast fishing industry," said George Hewison, secretary-treasurer of the United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union and one of 20 fishing industry advisers to the Canadian team.

"Canadian scientists have been studying the statistics for 16 years and they say Canadian fishermen intercept only 1.5 million American salmon, while Americans intercept 6.5 million Canadian fish.

Shepard said the two countries have agreed to limit the number of the other country's salmon taken.

Although reluctant to get into what he termed the numbers game, he agreed Canadians currently take about two million U.S. salmon a year while Americans take five million Canadian fish.

But he said the American salmon the Canadians are taking are the valuable chinook and coho, while the U.S. takes the less valuable Canadian pinks and sockeye.

Alverson said an independent technical arbitration group will be set up to determine more exact numbers and dollar value of fish each country is taking from the other. Both Canada and the U.S. will abide by the data eventually provided by the independent group.

He also said any imbalance will be rectified by allowing the country that lost more salmon to make up the difference over a number of years.

Hewison was skeptical.

"What this proposed pact represents is the government's lack of faith in Canada's ability to stand up to the Americans in a fish war. This treaty will cost Canada $1 billion 10 years hence."

Young arsonist gets probation

KELOWNA (CP) — A 17-year-old juvenile, who pleaded guilty to delinquency in connection with the Dec. 12 Kelowna Secondary School fire which injured a child and caused damage estimated at $2.8 million, was placed on probation Friday for four years.

Judge Jurgen Behncke ordered her to do four hours of community service work every week for the next two years, except during four weeks in the summer, Christmans week and Easter week.

A 13-year-old child burned in the fire and is now recovering at home after more than five months at Vancouver General Hospital and Sunnyville Rehabilitation Centre in Vancouver.

CP ship officers back agreement

VANCOUVER (CP) — Officers of CP Rail ships on the West Coast have ratified a new two-year contract giving them an average 13.5-per-cent wage increase this year and nine per cent next year.

The two-year pact will increase the skippers' income in the second year to $3,008 a month and chief engineers to $2,760. Spokesman Leo Gray says the ships' officers also got a dental plan.

Hookers cost fish buyer $30,000

VANCOUVER (UPC) — A 64-year-old fish buyer ended up paying more than he'd expected for two prostitutes he picked up early Friday when they allegedly picked his pockets of $30,000.

Police said the man told them he met the two prostitutes on a downtown street corner, then was driven in their car to his hotel room.

The three then went upstairs to his room and while one woman was occupied with the client, the other searched his pants and took the $30,000 cash.

The man told police he noticed the theft minutes after the two women had left. Police said they later arrested a 30-year-old woman and were still looking for a 25-year-old woman.

Fishermen reject 8% wage offer

VANCOUVER (CP) — B.C.'s 4,000 fishing industry shoreworkers have rejected by an 89.2-per-cent majority an eight-per-cent wage offer from the Fisheries Association of B.C., United Fishermen and Allied Workers Union president Jack Nichol said Friday.

Nichol said tendermen, who crew fish packers, also voted overwhelmingly to reject a similar offer, although the final tally was not yet known.

The union's shoreworker committee, headed by Nichol, will resume contract negotiations with the companies Monday, he said. The rejected offer included a 66-cent hourly wage increase on a base rate of $8.25, along with 10-cent adjustments for some trades.

School dust 'blown out of proportion'

BURNABY (CP) — The welding shop at Pacific Vocational Institute will remain closed until an evaluation can be made of the building's asbestos insulation which students say is creating a health hazard.

About 20 welding students refused to attend classes in the building Friday, claiming dust from loose particles of insulation was being inhaled.

After discussing the issue with the students, principal Tom Lownie said, "The whole thing is being blown out of proportion," but added he was closing the building at least until Monday.

The problem arose after an evening cleaning crew vacuumed the shop and created dust particles from the insulation that were still in the air when the students arrived Friday morning.

Cash shortage in PO probed

PORT SIMPSON (CP) — The post office in this northern B.C. coastal community has been closed indefinitely pending the outcome of an investigation into what is believed to be a serious cash shortage, a spokesman for Canada Post said Friday.

The community's 1,400 residents will have to fly or take a boat to Prince Rupert, 24 kilometres to the south, to pick up their mail, said spokesman Fred Morley.

There is no road linking the two communities.

Morley said the shortage was discovered Tuesday during an audit by security investigation officers from the Vancouver office. He would not say how much money is involved nor how long the investigation would take.

The post office was closed because no one was willing and qualified to take over the postmaster's job, he said.

Bill 28 means a more secure pension for public service employees.

Here's why:

Public service employees today enjoy an excellent pension arrangement . . . with full indexing to provide cost-of-living increases. Critics of Bill 28 claim this new measure would eliminate indexing — but this is totally false.

What Bill 28 will do is limit the level of indexing to a maximum of about 8% annually. Only at this level of indexing is it possible to ensure a fully funded pension plan — that is, a pension plan with sufficient funds to pay for itself.

The present indexing policy has resulted in unfunded liabilities of nearly $100 million. If these liabilities are allowed to grow, the very existence of pension plans will be threatened. To provide long-term security, the level of indexing must be kept to a resonable level . . . and that is the primary purpose of Bill 28.

As a further means of ensuring secure pensions, it is necessary to increase the contribution to existing plans from both sides. The increase, from 6½% to 7% of salary, applies both to the contributions of employees and that of the government. Contrary to the claims of critics, such an increase is not arbitrary . . . but has always been provided for under the Pension (Public Service) Act of 1974.

By placing a ceiling on pension indexing — and by providing more pension plan funding — the government is providing an important service to public employees, pensioners and members of the general public.

For pensioners, the new measures under Bill 28 will guarantee that pension increases granted will be paid for as long as they live.

For active employees — and for taxpayers — the measures mean that future costs of pension indexing will be stable and predictable.

Bill 28 is a fair and sensible piece of legislation — ensuring long-term pension security for public service employees, at a cost our province can afford. It deserves the support of every responsible British Columbian.

Fine tuning needed

The basic principle behind the government's controversial pension bill is sound enough: ensure that contributions from employer and employee are sufficient to guarantee that those who pay into the plan will receive their pensions when they retire.

That means that the government should not allow the build-up of massive "unfunded liabilities," the obligation but not the money to pay future pensions.

The government should not back down one iota from this principle.

The broad-brush, across-the-board way in which the government is applying the principle in the pensions bills should, however, be reviewed.

Provincial Secretary Evan Wolfe is applying two basic techniques to all pension plans involved — those of the provincial employees, the teachers, the municipal workers, and the college employees. First, it is increasing the employees' contributions from 6½ to 7 per cent of salary. Second, it is limiting indexing in future to a maximum of eight per cent per year, no matter how much the cost of living rises.

Wolfe says these steps are necessary because the four plans now have a total liability of $1 billion — much too high.

The figure is indeed too high, but it is not equally distributed among the four plans. The teachers' pension plan alone has about three-quarters of the liability, while the provincial employees, with almost twice as many members, have an unfunded liability of only about $140 million. Moreover, an actuarial study has indicated that the liability will disappear within 20 years.

One explanation for this is the differing nature of the two jobs. A high proportion of teachers who enter the B.C. educational system, stay there for the duration of their careers and collect their entire pension on retirement. The government employees, on the other hand, include a high proportion of short-term workers in jobs with high turnovers. The workers leaving these jobs take out of the fund only their own contributions, not those the government has made on their behalf.

It does not make sense to treat both groups the same way. More drastic measures may be needed to keep the teachers' fund in good shape, while less may be necessary for the provincial or municipal employees' funds.

It is also possible for the government to retain the principle of its proposals while satisfying some of the workers' criticisms. For instance, if the indexing system is to be limited, it could also be changed to a flat rate rather than percentage system. This would mean that every retired worker would receive the same dollar increase in his pension. It would benefit those who are struggling with low pensions, instead of giving the largest increases to those who already have the most satisfactory income.

The government's unilateral action in introducing the pension bills caused more trouble than was necessary, but there is still time to meet with the workers and ease the controversy.

Tar and feathers for Drapeau?

MONTREAL — Jean Drapeau is making himself scarce these days.

The 64 year-old Montreal mayor, severely criticized by a Quebec commission of inquiry into Olympic costs, has avoided public appearances for more than a week.

But while the commission's revelations of municipal waste and incompetence are staggering, Drapeau could escape with only minor scars to his prestige and power.

To the dismay of his municipal opponents, there has been no public outcry for Drapeau's resignation, despite the report's verdict that he "must assume the greater part of the blame" for the huge cost overruns that resulted in a $1 billion deficit.

Other cities

In most other North American cities, Drapeau would be run out of town for the way he bungled the Olympic project.

The city of Montreal has been forced by provincial legislation to pay off $214 million of the debt through a special property tax that will be in effect until 1997.

This year, a homeowner with property assessed at $50,000 will have to pay an extra $51 on his tax bill.

The money spent on the two-week Olympic extravaganza could have been used to finance 6,000 new housing units every year in Montreal at a cost of $20,000 each in a city with the worst housing problems.

The mayor blithely insisted throughout the Olympic controversy that he was a victim of circumstances, placing the blame on inflation, labor problems and lack of cooperation.

But Judge Malouf, who commands a considerable reputation for integrity, rejected most of Drapeau's arguments as pathetic excuses.

The Malouf report shows that the mayor set himself up as "the real project manager" for the Games' construction program.

The mayor admitted he himself drew up a 1969 cost estimate of $120 million for the Games (one-eleventh of the final cost) even though he did not know what sports facilities would be required.

Drapeau said he never requested any other architect besides Paris architect Roger Taillibert to submit plans for the Olympic facilities, explaining that he disliked the idea of an architectural competition.

Instead of settling for a functional and more economic design, he preferred something "avant garde" that Montrealers could take pride in.

Former city engineer Claude Phaneuf testified he was told by "the boss" to keep secret the fact that Taillibert was designing the Olympic installations because a lot of journalists and architects were trying to find out what was going on.

Malouf said Drapeau's choice of "unique and unusual designs" by an architect from a foreign country was the principal cause for the cost increases of the Games.

The report also shows that the mayor refused to supply information on the Olympic situation to the federal and Quebec governments when the delays and cost overruns began to get out of hand.

The commission also blamed Drapeau for entertaining questionable links with Olympic contractors, for accepting contributions to his Civic party fund from some contractors, and for failing to call tenders for many important contracts.

Although the commission found no evidence of illegal activity on Drapeau's part, it made a highly convincing case of conflict of interest and incompetence.

In the last municipal election, in which Drapeau won 61 per cent of the vote, he was able to dismiss such talk as idle gossip by the news media and opposition.

The words of Justice Malouf have more authority.

May survive

But the celebrated Drapeau mystique may be enough to get the mayor out of yet another tight corner. Over the years, Montrealers have found fulfillment of their fantasies in the mayor's grandiose projects.

And there is no doubt about the mayor's ability to pluck the heartstrings of civic pride in his constituents.

As he said in a prepared statement, read the other day by an aide: "There are those who are quick to criticize people with big dreams . . . I personally prefer . . . and the great majority of Montrealers seemingly agree with me, the innovative, the daring."

He may be right.

Encircle, search, and secrecy

OTTAWA —There is the case of Peter, the case of Jo Ann and the case of John.

The Peter, of course, is Lougheed. Until the Quebec referendum, the real opposition leader in Canada was Rene Levesque. Today, as we approach the July 1 deadline on a oil-price agreement between Ottawa and Alberta, the real opposition is Prince Peter.

One suspects that Marc Lalonde, the stiff-necked former bureaucrat who has enraged Alberta as energy minister, is about to learn an old western cowboy tradition: Encircle the enemy.

Sneak attack

Lougheed, who sometimes seems as insular as Calvin Coolidge, has cleverly emerged from Fortress Alberta and has snuck in behind Lalonde, closing the circle.

Lougheed, who is roundly criticized for his obsession with only Alberta concerns, made a major speech in Winnipeg this week, stroking fangless Manitoba in search of support for his stubborn stand on provincial control of resources.

Thursday, the premier who likes to stay at home spoke in Halifax, currying poor Nova Scotia, which resents Ottawa handouts as much as Alberta resents Ottawa's grab on its oil revenue.

In between, Lougheed squeezed in a visit to the Fredericton home of New Brunswick Premier Richard Hatfield, where he got a strong statement on behalf of Alberta's adamant stand on oil.

This is a shrewd ploy since Hatfield, although a Tory, is probably the strongest supporter of Pierre Trudeau.

On oil though, Hatfield gladly seconds the cause that so puzzles westerners: "At the moment, Alberta is getting $14.75 for this oil when Canada just entered into a deal with Mexico to buy at $35."

How can you justify it? Peter says. How can you justify it? Richard now says.

Marc is being encircled.

The case of Jo Ann now reveals that however stupid we may think Ottawa bureaucrats and gumshoes can be, they are always willing to provide a new example to prove they are worse.

Jo Ann Gosselin is an Ottawa free lance reporter specializing in defence matters for Southam News Service.

Last Sept. 5, she wrote the first of five articles revealing without a doubt that the vaunted "competition" between McDonnell Douglas and General Dynamics for the $4-billion contract to supply Canada's new fighter aircraft was a farce.

She showed, by means of a document she had obtained called DITC Industrial Benefits Valuation Report, that a government study recommended the Department of National Defence reject the General Dynamics bid and while the illusion of a competition remained, it was all a sham.

On Nov. 8, two months after her articles appeared, some nerd in the defence department acting without cabinet approval had six RCMP bodies search her house, her files, her personal mail, her family album, the dishwasher.

What was so stupid about the Tory inspired raid was that it revealed Liberal incompetence and cover-up. In April, the government awarded the $4-billion contract to McDonnell Douglas, just as Gosselin had predicted.

This week, nine months after the raid, the ponderous RCMP operation announced that it had decided not to lay charges against Jo Ann Gosselin. Hooray for speed of decision.

She is a free-lance reporter who lives off her own material. The RCMP did not return the six boxes of material or her notebooks until last week. Bureaucracy is an ass.

No compensation

Will any brave Liberal (or Tory) MP stand up in the Commons next week to ask if Jo Ann Gosselin is to be recompensed for what the state has done to her? Don't hold your breath.

The case of John involves, naturally, the accident-prone John Munro, whose present incarnation as northern affairs minister is just his latest stop in a series of strange happenings in which he gets caught in patronage, phones, judges and has mysterious encounters with bathtubs.

"You guys are rotten, you know that," he grumbles to cameramen assigned to record evidence of his ill-explained injuries.

One would think the term rotten would apply to the competence of the staff of a minister who can disappear into a hospital for three days, be described as suffering from the flu and doesn't seem to want to explain things.

What's it worth?

Already some union organizers are calling it "the revolt of the middle class," and it is showing signs of becoming one of the biggest new issues in labor-management relations.

It was demonstrated most effectively in B.C. in the recent disputes involving nurses, both those employed in hospitals and those employed directly by the government. Social workers may be the next to display the attitude.

In essence it is a realization by highly-skilled, semi-professional and professional workers that the difference between their salaries and those of the unskilled or semi-skilled is steadily declining, and a determination to turn that situation around.

A union official explains that the perception of a reducing gap between salaries of skilled and unskilled workers is correct — at least when it comes to unionized workers. "In the past few years, we've concentrated on getting the base rate up," he says. That means the unions have been ensuring that even the most unskilled, lowest-paid workers in a plant are being paid enough to ensure them a decent standard of living.

The result is that unskilled workers who formerly might have been earning only the minimum wage or a little above are now making $7, $9 or even more an hour. The salaries of the professional and semi-professional workers, especially in the so-called "service areas" like nursing and social work, have not risen nearly as fast.

The result is that now, after several years of differing increases, the more highly skilled workers are realizing they are making very little more — or perhaps even a little less — than garbagemen, letter carriers, or supermarket clerks. (Supermarket clerks seem to excite special wrath on the part of the middle class, maybe because they are such a visible group to the public.)

They are determined to reverse that trend, and, at least in the case of the nurses' dispute, conciliators and mediators have been agreeing with them. The nurses won contracts as high as 44 per cent over 27 months — just about 20 per cent per year — to bring back the historical difference between their salaries and those of less-skilled hospital workers.

An appropriate resolution of the situation, however, will require more than a look at traditional differences. It will require our community to examine the whole question of pay standards and the criteria for paying different occupational groups different amounts.

Most of us have grown up with the traditional concept of "get more education and you will get a better job," and 'better' has always been interpreted to mean, at least in part, higher-paying. Nurses and social workers believe they should be compensated for the extra years of schooling they put in, time during which the high-school dropout was already earning money.

However, some people are now suggesting that this concept needs review. A 'better' job need not be a higher-paying job, they propose. Rather, a 'better' job may be one that is more interesting, more challenging, and allows an employee more opportunity for development and creativity. The official term for this is a job with a higher level of 'job satisfaction'.

The difficulty arises because 'job satisfaction' is so intangible that it is virtually impossible to measure. A job that is extremely satisfying to one person may be found dull and even unpleasant by another. To try to work the concept into contract negotiations is absurd.

All the same, if the concept is accepted, even on a philosophical basis, it would mean a basic change in our whole attitude toward work. People working as assembly-line workers or supermarket clerks would receive good money, not necessarily to compensate them for their skills, but rather for putting in time on a job that is not intrinsically challenging or interesting.

As the union official points out, being a supermarket clerk "is a difficult job. It's monotonous, it involves a lot of standing, and it can mean a lot of pressure" when a store is busy.

Perhaps our community, through the provincial government, should take a good look at just what we're paying people for, before the revolt of the middle-class begins to send an inflationary wage spiral through a large part of our economy.

Year of the father

BOSTON — The timing is perfect. The day of the Father arrives on schedule at the peak of what has surely been the year of the Father.

For months now we've been obsessed with fathering. If it's true as Margaret Mead once wrote that mothering is natural and fathering is invented, we have clearly been reinventing fatherhood.

The signs of a consensus are around us. Out of all the seasons of rhetoric about change and tradition is emerging a new ideal of the good man as a good father, of the good father as attentive, caring, nurturing.

In public life this spring, the president based his claim to be father of the country on his talent as father of a family. In the classic fatherhood commercial of the primaries, we watched him helping Amy with her homework because, he said, "I don't think there's any way you can separate the responsibilities of a husband or a father or a basic human being from that of being a good president. What I do in the White House is to maintain a good family life which I consider to be crucial to being a good president."

During Family Month in Massachusetts this May, the "pro-family" conservative governor, Ed King, who spent six nights at home in six months in office, described his lifestyle with — finally — more guilt than pride. The same week on a plane from Washington, Sen. Paul Tsongas settled down next to his three-year-old daughter for a workday round trip. He is, he says, determined to spend time with her, even if today it is flight time.

And, like some cinematic backdrop to all this, the movie father of the year is no longer a distant ball-playing breadwinner, but Dustin Hoffman. The Oscar now goes to the man who changes before our very eyes. We praise the Kramers of the world, the men who learn firsthand about the wrenching intensity of child love. They are our models of what is possible.

But in real life, in our lives, the growing consensus of what a father should be still reaches far ahead of the reality. The demands on men have changed faster than their ability to cope with them. The demands men make on themselves change faster than the institutions that often rule them. So men have opened up a new gap in their lives and guilt grows in it.

In the distant past, mothers and fathers worked together with their children. In the more recent past, we turned the sexes into specialists. The good provider was by definition the good father. He was a parent by paycheque.

But the man who was once judged by economics is now also judged by emotions. In mid-stream and mid-life and mid-parenting, we have upped the ante.

For Father's Day we now give him mixed messages, gift-wrapped in higher expectations.

His president tells him that fathering and leading the country are compatible. Still, while three years ago the White House staff was told to spend time with their children, now only the workaholics are in charge.

Women tell him they wish he were more involved with children, but they also insist on the unilateral right to control births and almost always win the right to custody. Sometimes it seems dangerous to care without having control.

Then in the media he reads about a new creature, Superfather — able to leap tall emotional buildings in a single bound, able to wipe tears and win promotions, to share small lives and earn big livings. But he doesn't read how to do it.

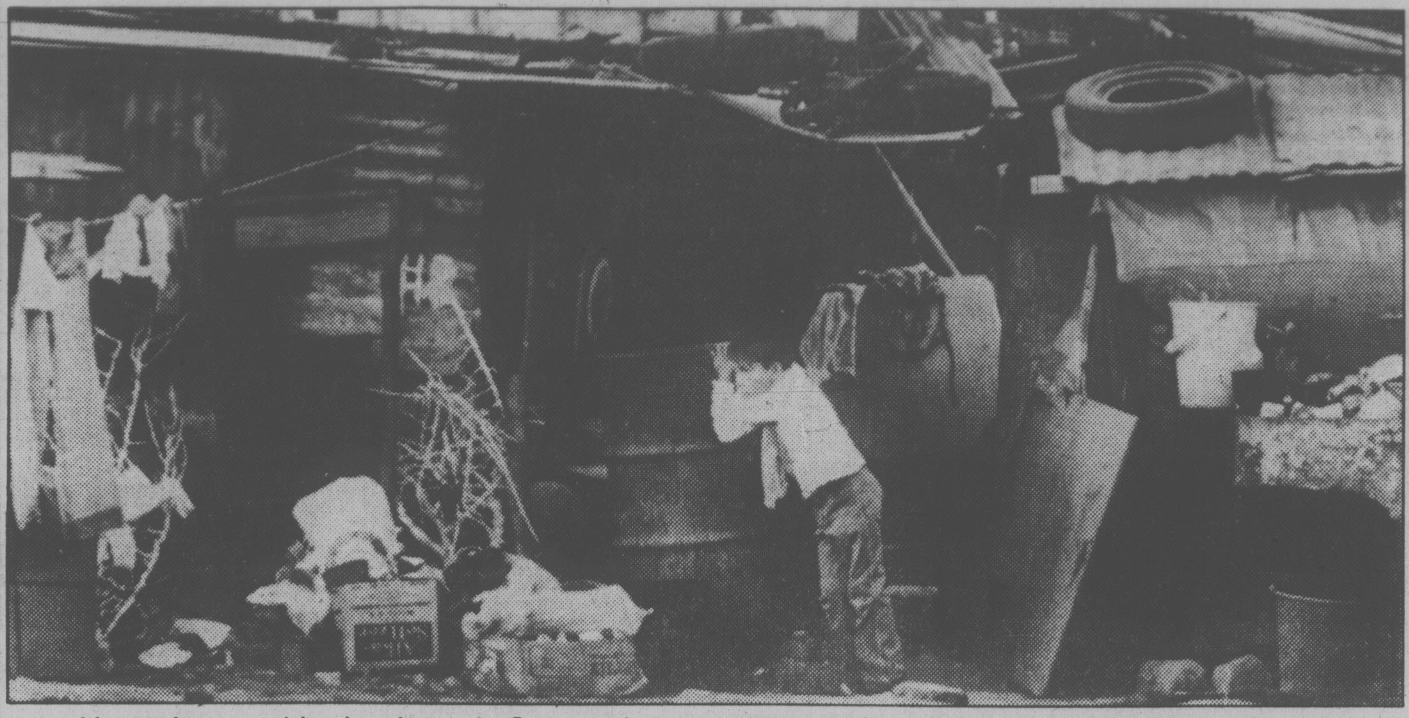
In real life, the demands of the home and office clash for him too. The rewards of this new fathering are as wonderful but as uncertain as children. It is easier to read the meaning in a paycheque than in the eyes and lives of children. After all, the scene he remembers most vividly from Kramer vs. Kramer is the moment the man got canned for child caring. "Shame on you."

Even in the year of the Caring Father this reality chills him. At the White House Conference on Families in Baltimore last week there was an undercurrent: What about fathers? . . . What about fathers? In his own life there is another undercurrent. What do I gain and what do I lose?

No, it is no easier fathering in the midst of conflict. No easier than mothering. The men raised by one kind of father are expected to know how to be another. New ideals take over; and we are all caught in the midst of change.

Fathering is, in fact, a lot like mothering this year.

The Boston Globe



Young boy outside slum home in Guatemala . . . self-interest and humanism demand that we help

A matter of survival

Rich north must help Third World poor

By STANLEY McDOWELL
The Globe and Mail

It can't be seen any longer as a matter of charity, generosity or even enlightened self-interest. Reform of the patterns of economic relations between the rich world and the poor has become, for the rich no less than for the poor, a matter of self-interest pure and simple — in fact, of survival.

The most industrialized countries — Western Europe, North America and Japan — are collectively in the position of a merchant who has kept up his volume of sales by encouraging an impoverished clientele to buy more than it can afford, on credit that it cannot hope to repay. His customers have already had to take on heavy new debt simply to keep up the interest payments on the old. Their bankruptcy is already in sight. And his own is hard on its heels.

North-South: A Program for Survival, the report of the Independent Commission on International Development Issues, or Brandt Report, makes its appearance in a colder, harder, more pessimistic and more self-seeking world than that of the Sixties in which its predecessor, the Pearson Report, was born. It is a world in which most of the ills of the poor majority of mankind are as severe as they were when Lester Pearson made his report to the World Bank, or more so, but many of the remedies prescribed for them have proved inadequate, or actually damaging.

But the commission, chaired by the former chancellor of West Germany, Willy Brandt, who contributes an eloquent personal introduction to a 304-page volume that otherwise drags out and softens too many of its punches with tactful verbiage and euphemistic circumlocution, sometimes sounds ill at ease in the presence of the evidence that reform of the economic relations between the comparatively affluent Northern Hemisphere and the impoverished South has become a matter of urgent self-interest to the North.

It prefers to make its appeal to sentiments more lofty than those of naked self-interest: "The principal motives for our proposals are human solidarity and a commitment to international social justice."

But the evidence is there that, especially since the oil-price shocks of 1973-74, the manufacturing industries of Western Europe, North America and Japan have been keeping their heads above water thanks to increasing sales to the Third World.

One job in 20 in the United States now depends on exports to the Third World. In 1975, the year that the first phase of the energy crisis pushed the economies of the European Economic Community to their lowest point of the decade, EEC exports to the United States fell by 17 per cent, while those to Third World countries rose by 25 per cent over all, and those to the so-called ACP Third World countries, in Asia, the Caribbean and the Pacific, went up 33 per cent. The Organization for Economic Co-operation and development estimates that from 1973 to 1977 the Western industrialized world gained 900,000 jobs a year from trade with Third World countries, selling them manufactured and processed goods, buying their raw materials.

BRANDT . . . chilling report

On the books of what the report persists in calling, in contradiction to its own evidence, the developing countries, this trade has shown up in ever-larger balance-of-payments deficits. Their collective deficit on current account was $21 billion in 1977, $32 billion in '78, an estimated $50 billion in '79 and a projected $60 billion for this year. On top of this come debt-servicing costs: "In the three-year period 1979-81, the aggregate payments for servicing the debts of all developing countries excluding OPEC are estimated at $120 billion."

And since the Third World is now obliged to do most of its borrowing from banks and other commercial lenders in the West rather than from international agencies or official development assistance programs, it should be no surprise that "the debtor economies and the entire international credit structure are now very vulnerable to any disruptions in the flows of capital." The case for radical monetary reform, creation of new institutions to channel funds to the Third World, and massive, institutionalized transfers of buying and investment power is solidly based on the concern of the North for its own well-being, as well as on the cruel deprivation that is the common lot of the South.

But the deprivation makes a stunning plea of its own, beginning at the beginning, with the most elementary necessities of life:

"Between 20 and 25 million children below the age of five die every year in developing countries, and a third of these deaths are from diarrhea caught from polluted water." The United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF) estimates that "in 1978 alone more than 12 million children under the age of five died of hunger."

But other horsemen too, take their toll, thriving, not on the absolute lack of buying power in the hands of the poor, but on its misuse:

"With the recession in the arms industry in the early 1970s, following the end of the Vietnam War . . . the drive to sell weapons to the Third World was intensified, often aimed at stimulating new demand irrespective of real defence needs."

Much of the investment that has been made in the Third World has done more harm than good, increasing the hunger and misery it was expected to relieve, setting in motion a process more accurately described as under-development than as development. This is largely because the military ambitions of Third World governments, working in tandem with the narrowly viewed strategic interests of the governments of the industrial North, and the economic interests of the northern arms industry, have had the decisive weight where fundamental economic decisions are made.

And in this area too, the Brandt Report warns, the real security of the North as well as of the South calls for radical change:

"Much of the insecurity in the world is connected with the division between rich and poor countries," it warns, adding, in what could be taken for understatement pushed to the point of black humor, that "grave injustice and mass starvation (cause) additional instability."

Or as Willy Brandt puts it, "We may already be arming ourselves to death."

Letters to the editor

Election needed

Mr. Lattes' letter in the June 2 issue of your paper deserves a reply. His analysis of the role of the Opposition in a democratically elected Legislative Assembly is slightly awry.

He is 100 per cent correct in his statement that it is not the function of the opposition to be destructive. Its purpose is to review pending legislation and other acts of the government and to expose those facets of such legislation and administrative activities which in its opinion are contrary to the common good.

However, to do that, it must have access to all pertinent information. That is why a question period is part of our legislative process. If and when a government refuses to answer legitimate questions, parliamentary democracy breaks down. The Speaker of the House is the one who determines the legitimacy of any question. Once a question is asked it is up to the minister involved to answer such question. Any minister who refuses to answer is guilty of obstructing the work of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and by implication is destroying the very foundation on which our legislative framework is built.

What B.C. needs today is not an opposition which will lie down and play dead but an election to once and for all clear the air of the nauseating stench created by "dirty tricks".

Recent actions of our Victoria government remind one of the later days of the Roman Empire when massive expenditures of public money on extravagant projects increased. One of the reasons for touting B.C. Place, Fixed Links, Convention Centres and goodness knows what else, is to draw the attention of the electorate away from the utter failure of this administration to deal with every day housekeeping problems. All this while Marie Antoinette McGeer plays with his satellite dish.

Here we have a province which only a few short years ago stood on the forefront of social legislation and we see its political picture reduced to a three ring circus. What a real tragedy. — Eric Foure, 1253 Hastings Street.

Arts centre

Though not terribly well-informed of the 'official' pros and cons of the proposed convention centre on the Inner Harbor, we would like to put forth our thoughts on the matter.

Why must city council insist on going against public opinion? Is this government by and for the people or government by and for the businessman?

Obviously, a convention centre will need large government subsidies for support, although this seems to be the reason against the construction of a good concert hall/playhouse/art facility.

An arts centre, we believe, is vital to Western Canada, and what better place than Victoria? We have a beautiful and popular city here.

There is absolutely no place in Victoria where one can adequately produce a decent opera, ballet, or play. With all of our present facilities, not one has a decently sized stage with good scene and prop capabilities. And what about a western extension of the National Gallery in Ontario? Are Eastern Canadians the only ones allowed to view (without horrendous travel expense) our national collections?

If we were to have a great arts centre here, not only would we attract more top-rated performers and acts, but we would also be bringing in tourist dollars (for the all-important business community), and creating the arts centre of Western Canada. We certainly would be adding greatly to the prestige of our city. Look at Sidney, Australia and its opera house — a good modern example. — George Clement, A. P. Casey, Joan Peaker, Sylvia Thame, Madelaine Arimare, Janet Smith, David Curle, Margaret McGann, Anne Janeda, Ralph Muller, Dan Doherty, Eric Clarke, Rick N. Bateman, and James MacLock.

Downtown plans

I would just like to take this opportunity to express some personal ideas on the planning of Victoria's downtown.

First, as much space as possible should be saved or acquired for greenbelt. Next, we should bring no more traffic downtown. Downtown traffic could be reduced if a transportation centre were to be located either in Esquimalt or some distance north or east of downtown. This centre should include all bus systems plus trains as well as large capacity parkades, taxis and free shuttle buses to the downtown area.

There really should be a farmers'/fishermen's market somewhere on the Inner Harbor.

We must plan development for people, especially citizens. Also, we must realize future lifestyles will differ from today's, especially concerning transportation. The car is on its way out. Let's help it out of downtown. — Robert T. Allen, 2921 Cedar Hill Road.

Refreshing change

Congratulations to Oak Bay council for including the property owners in the municipality in the process of the preparation of a Community Plan. The questionnaire gives us all an opportunity to express our preferences and ideas.

What a refreshing attitude compared to the arrogance of our federal and provincial cabinets and even some local councils, who are determined that only they know what is good for us, forgetting completely that they were elected to power to represent and serve us, not to dictate their ideas at our expense. — Joe Barber-Starkey, 1757 Elgin Road.

Before the judge

Judge Lorne Pearce ordered a pre-sentence report for a 31-year-old woman who pleaded guilty to six charges Friday in Victoria provincial court.

Kathleen Elizabeth Brummitt, of 820 Fisgard, pleaded guilty to three counts of failing to remain at the scene of an accident and one count each of dangerous driving, assaulting a peace officer, and driving while under suspension.

She was remanded until July 3 so that a pre-sentence report could be prepared.

Crown counsel Robert Mulligan said the incident sparking all of the charges started about 1:30 p.m., April 18, when Brummitt, also known as Candice Brummitt, was driving a truck out of the Esquimalt Lions Lodge, at 874 Fleming.

Mulligan said she hit two parked cars before leaving the scene and hit another car in the 800-block Colville. Witnesses who saw Brummitt strike the third car more than once told Esquimalt police they thought the woman was either "drunk or crazy."

Esquimalt police, with the assistance of Victoria police, found the truck and Brummitt at her home. When they went to apprehend her, Mulligan said, they found her passed out in bed.

When she awoke, she became violent and tried to kick and grab the uniformed officers and had to be restrained before being transported to the Victoria police station.

There, she continued to kick and scream, and bit Const. James Askew of Esquimalt, who required hospital treatment for his wound.

Mulligan said Brummitt was convicted of impaired driving and failing to remain at the scene of an accident Jan. 3, 1978, when she was fined $50 on the drinking-driving charge and given a suspended sentence and six months probation on the other. Court was also informed she had convictions for possession of stolen property, causing a disturbance, and theft between 1976 and 1977.

Defence lawyer Christopher Brennan said Brummitt was asleep and in an advanced state of intoxication from liquor, prescribed drugs and other sources when police arrived.

He said marital problems the night before led to the incident.

Pearce ordered a 17-year-old to do community service work for the Oak Bay police or Oak Bay Recreation Centre after the youth pleaded guilty to causing a disturbance by shouting at the rec centre and causing wilful damage at the police station April 16.

Crown counsel Don Laughton said Garth Norman Tufford, of 1515 Fell, was with three others at the rec centre about 5:30 p.m. and that they were drinking beer and shouting and swearing near the tennis courts. Laughton said beer bottles were thrown onto the tennis courts before police were called and Tufford was arrested.

Court was informed Tufford was extremely uncooperative with police and, at the station, scratched obscenities and kicked a hole in the wall. Damage was placed at $50.

Social worker Howie Anderson of the Human Resources ministry, called as a character witness by defence lawyer Barry Mah Ming, said Tufford had been a ward of the ministry about seven years and had an alcohol problem. He said Tufford began attending Alcoholics Anonymous for Teens and was booked for the Dallas House program on July 2.

Pearce handed Tufford a suspended sentence, six months probation, and 24 hours of community service work with the police or at the Oak Bay Recreation Centre. He was also ordered to make restitution for damages.

A 19-year-old youth was denied bail and remanded in custody until next Wednesday for election of his trial method.

Lloyd David Williamson, of 70 Dallas Road, was charged with possession of stolen jewelery with an alleged value of $5,500.

On a charge of possesion of marijuana, Williamson pleaded guilty and decided to serve the 10-day default time rather than pay the $100 fine.

Williamson was stopped in Nootka Court where he was searched and the marijuana found.

Fined for drinking-driving offences were: Jose Alberto De Amaral, 19, of 866 Carey, $500; Brett James Trimble, 18, of Surrey, $400; and Michael Philip Lafontaine, 21, of 483 Meredith Crescent, $300.

Jury still excused

The jury remained excused Friday in the B.C. Supreme Court trial of Denis Barry McFadden, 29, of Sidney, accused of first-degree murder in the death March 17 of Marion Barbara MacKay, 31, of Saanich.

The prosecution and defence were engaged in a voir dire, or trial-within-a-trial, which began 2½ days earlier. Juries are always excused on such occasions pending a ruling by the judge.

The trial, presided over by Mr. Justice Gordon MacKinnon, was to continue Monday when the jury was expected to return.

Transvestites win new rights

BONN (Reuter) — Transvestites and persons who have had sex-change operations have been given new rights under a law passed in the West German parliament Thursday.

Those aged 25 and over who have had male-to-female sex change operations will be exempted from military service. They also gain a woman's right to retire and claim a pension earlier.

Transvestites aged 18 and over will be allowed to change their first names on their passports.

Cortes Island road show to Legislature

There will be questions in the legislature next week as the battle of Cortes Island goes on.

The dispute centres on a road used by half a dozen residents who own waterfront properties on Cortes, which is reached from Campbell River by ferry.

The road cuts across property of the Cortes Bay Marina. The land including the road was purchased by marina operator Rankin Smith in 1974.

He says he permitted his neighbors to continue to use the road as a courtesy but they, in turn, insist it is a public road because it was maintened by government funds prior to 1974.

Next week Colin Gabelmann (NDP-North Island) will ask Highways Minister Alex Fraser if any documentation exists to prove public funds have at any time been used to maintain the road.

The dispute came to a head when Nesta Stackhouse placed an advertisement to sell a waterfront lot. The ad mentioned "public road access."

Smith pointed out that the road was private property, used by neighbors only as a courtesy. Mrs. Stackhouse said that wasn't true. The battle was joined.

Cortes resident Dan Campbell, former Socred minister of municipal affairs, is among those supporting Mrs. Stackhouse.

The matter will be resolved in the courts in Campbell River this fall unless there is an out-of-court settlement before then.

Deep Cove Executive
This excitingly different West Coast designed builder's home is an excellent example of unprecedented luxury combined with a unique architectural styling. Alive with the interplay of light and space, imaginatively planned yet offering the tranquility and privacy your family wants and needs. Incorporating such luxurious features as 13' x 27' master bedroom with a separate bathing room including a 4' x 8' shower leading into a private sauna. The secondary bedrooms share a common bathroom and have individual balconies. On the lower level is a large family room with F.P. (1 of 3) adjoining a darkroom with full bath facilities and a cheerful 10' x 12' laundry room. The dining room shares a heatilator F.P. with the sunken living room and adjoins the 20' long country kitchen with built-in nook. Located on the fully landscaped ½-acre property is a 16' x 30' heated workshop (220 amp) and a separate double garage. Offered at $179,000 with a large assumable 10¼% mortgage.
P.S. The wine cellar is a perfect 56 deg.

Parents back dropout effort

Sir James Douglas Parents' Committee hasn't any serious objections to the school board opening a centre for potential high school dropouts on the elementary school grounds.

The need for a centre in South Fairfield to handle dropouts was stressed by district superintendent Allan Stables at a meeting of parents Thursday night.

Parents' spokesman Carol Doroshuk said the general feeling of 29 parents attending the session with Stables appeared to be: "We're behind you and want to work well with you."

Before the meeting some parents had expressed concern that older pupils, perhaps with problems, would be associating with the younger children on the same school grounds.

The school district's plan is to accommodate up to 30 youngsters who have left or are about to leave school. They would get an alternative program in the two-room brick annex behind the school. The building is not used by SJD but has been rented to community groups.

Doroshuk said the parents had numerous questions for Stables, who assured them that a follow up meeting would be held in November to assess the program.

"There are so many that need the extra help and attention and the parents will see that they don't interfere with the other programs," Doroshuk said.

Stables said there had been hesitation before the meeting by parents who perceived the centre as a place for problem teenaged children, and therefore an undesireable influence. That was a natural reaction from the community when changes are proposed to correct a situation, he said.

"Everyone wants the solution, but not next to them. Put it somewhere else, put it in Alaska, but don't put it here. That's what they say."

He said similar programs aimed primarily at potential dropouts are operating in Greater Victoria. One is an alternative school in James Bay.

In order for the concept to work it was necessary to locate the program away from the junior secondary schools, Stables said. Obviously, it is the junior secondary schools which are rejected by these students having trouble relating, or who don't find the regular program relevant.

Guilty in pyramid

VANCOUVER (CP) — A California man pleaded guilty Friday in provincial court to a charge of operating an illegal pyramid scheme.

Ned Preston DeLancy, 33, of San Jose, was remanded in custody by Judge Gordon Johnson to June 19 for sentencing. A stay of proceedings was entered against Donald Raymond Davis alias Arquello, 28, of Palo Alto, Calif.

The two were arrested Wednesday after police raided a downtown motor hotel and seized documents relating to a pyramid scheme requiring initial investments of $1,000 and $5,000 in the hope of earning $16,000 and $40,000 respectively.

Police said as many as four clients at a time were being invited to the hotel room to invest in the scheme, a violation of section 189.1 of the Criminal Code.

Up-Island lodge offers 'adventure' packages

Strathcona Lodge Outdoor Education Centre, perched on the edge of 48-kilometre Upper Campbell-Buttle Lake, is offering "adventure holidays."

Long known for its teacher training and school programs, the non-profit society wants to change its image and attract vacationers interested in an outdoor experience, director Jim Boulding says.

Recent articles about serious pollution of the Upper Campbell-Buttle Lake system by Western Mines isn't making the task of publicizing the centre easier, according to Boulding.

"We do not use the water or eat the fish from the lake, so although we deplore the pollution, we are not immediately affected by it," he says.

Strathcona hosts about 4,000 school children during the winter months, but has been in the summer tourist business for 20 years.

The centre offers 40 different packages — most including two or three days at the lodge and extended canoeing, kayaking, hiking, mountaineering, sailing or Indian culture trips.

Guests pay about $40 a day and stay anywhere from a few days to several weeks.

Routine skin frisk 'illegal'

OTTAWA (CP) — An order by warden Nicholas Caros that all prisoners be "throughly skin frisked" when leaving or entering the Matsqui federal penitentiary has been ruled illegal by the Federal Court.

A judgment released Friday by Mr. Justice A. A. Cattnach said the order is in conflict with penitentiary service regulations which allow the searches only when there is reasonable grounds to suspect that a prisoner is in possession of contraband.

Skin frisking consists of a prisoner being completely undressed, a detailed search of his clothing and a visual examination of the exposed body.

The prisoner is required to bend over and spread his buttocks so that a guard "may complete a proper skin frisk," the court was told.

Conrad Gunn, a prisoner at Matsqui, refused to bend over on returning to the jail from hospital. He said it was degrading humiliating and unlawful.

He later was sentenced to 30 days disassociation — solitary confinement — but appealed to the Federal Court.

Cattanach said the warden believed skin searches were necessary because of an incident Nov. 10, 1978, when a prisoner hid a knife on his person before being escorted to hospital.

The prisoner seriously wounded two guards and committed a murder before his recapture, causing concern among residents of Matsqui. Hospital employees also were reluctant to treat prisoners without assurance of the control over them.

Capacity audience stirred by Vancouver Symphony

By AUDREY JOHNSON

In a discussion of any orchestra that exists among the top half dozen on the continent, opinions expressed must be largely based on the academic and on personal values and preferences.

The Vancouver Symphony is big and it's beautiful. Its sound is lush and finely blended with a glowing bass, a creamy upper string tone, admirable winds and intelligent percussion.

It is in fact, a composite instrument that possesses qualities of flexibility, precision, focus and sensitivity to an exemplary degree.

And the man who plays on this instrument — its conductor, Kazuyoshi Akiyama — uses it brilliantly, as a great violinist uses a superior violin.

Making its first appearance in Victoria in more than 30 years, the Vancouver Symphony drew a capacity audience to the Royal Theatre Friday. The program Akiyama had chosen was colorful, stirring, drawing extensively on the resources of the ensemble.

Rimsky-Korsakov's primitive-orgiastic Russian Easter Overture and the wild pagan excitement of Moussorgsky's Night On Bald Mountain, and sandwiched between them an extreme contrast of elegant civilization in Mozart's serenade for strings, Eine Kleine Nachtmusik. The concluding work was Tchaikovsky's passionate dark-humored Symphony No. 4 in F minor.

Such a program, heavily charged with intense emotions, placing extreme virtuosic demands on the orchestra, could have been oppressively flamboyant and ultimately exhausting.

That was not its effect, thanks to the superior artistry of the conductor.

Akiyama's profound attention to every detail of shading and structure, his sensitive molding of phrase and illumination of inner voices and consistently developed subtlties in texture and dimension, kept the ear and the mind refreshed.

One was intensely aware of the mournful Slavic undercurrents to the mood of celebration in Russian Easter; of the shudder beneath the frenetic passion of Bald Mountain.

Akiyama's balletic movement on the podium is a response to his total immersion in the music. It made delicately visible the romantic warmth he drew from his strings in Eine Kleine Nachtmusic; and at times it pulled one, as though by some magnetic force, into the very core of the great climaxes in the Tchaikovsky.

The brooding, tragic Tchaikovsky of the fourth symphony was a moving presence in this finely balanced and proportioned rendition.

It was an evening in which the emotions were deeply stirred by an artist who is also very much a magician in conjuring forth images.

The audience response was vocal and standing and gave rise to an encore — a spine-tingling performance of the Polivetzian Dances from Prince Igor.

Diamonds found, but not owner

City police have recovered a set of valuable diamond earrings and lady's diamond ring worth several thousand dollars.

But now they have one slight problem.

They don't know who the jewelry belongs to.

The jewelry was found by officers searching a drug suspect on a downtown street Thursday night.

The man has been charged with possession of stolen property.

Insp. Angus Stewart, head of the detective's division said he believed the goods may have been taken in a breakin Wednesday night or Thursday.

"Maybe the owner hasn't realized her home was broken into, or maybe she's away on holidays."

Persons who find jewelry missing should contact detectives at 384-4111.

Ottawa man named forest centre head

MACDONALD
. . . returning to city

Ross Macdonald of Ottawa has been appointed director of the Pacific Forest Research Centre in Saanich.

Since 1977 he has been Canadian director of forest protection and responsible for research on control of pests, disease and fire.

Macdonald held various jobs in the Victoria area in the past.

In 1968 he was the local section head of forest entomology and became program manager of forest protection research.

In 1972 he was promoted to deputy director of the Saanich centre, a position he held until his appointment to Ottawa in 1977.

The centre, at 506 West Burnside, has been without a director for 18 months, since the retirement of Dr. Michael Drinkwater.

Macdonald will be in charge of a staff of 150, including scientists and technicians who conduct forest research.

He has visited several countries to study their methods of biological control of pests, including a trip to China in 1975 and the Soviet Union in 1977.

The Canadian Forest Service made the announcement of the appointment and also confirmed an earlier report that Les Reed, a Vancouver forest economist, has been appointed to a new position, assistant deputy minister responsible for the forestry service.

The post raises the status of the forest service on the federal level.

2 days not enough for 100k mail ride

OTTAWA (CP) — Bill Kirby thought an envelope, self-addressed to the post office, would get red-carpet treatment.

It didn't and he says it cost him an $80,000 contract for postal highway service in the Smiths Falls area, about 100 kilometres south of Ottawa.

Kirby's bid had to reach the main post office by Wednesday to be considered for the contract so he mailed the letter from Smiths Falls Monday afternoon.

"The outside of the envelope shows the letter left for Ottawa that night but wasn't received in Ottawa until 8:32 a.m. Thursday," Kirby said.

To add insult to injury, Kirby received his letter, which contained his tender and a certified cheque, back from the post office in less than 24 hours.

"That's incredible," Kirby said.

Gordon McVicar, post office contract administration officer, said Kirby simply left it too late.

"There is a high volume of mail coming into the Ottawa system," he said. "We advertised three weeks ago and he could have driven to Ottawa in an hour if he was that concerned.

Cyprus force extended

UNITED NATIONS (CP) — The United Nations Security Council voted Friday to extend the mandate of the UN peacekeeping force in Cyprus for yet another six-month term.

The vote on the extension was 14 countries in favor, with none opposed. China, did not participate in the voting because it opposes peacekeeping forces in principle.

There are about 2,500 UN soldiers on Cyprus, of which 515 are Canadian.

The UN force was first sent to Cyprus in 1964.

Also, in a report critical of the Israeli-backed Christian militia's tactics, UN Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim on Friday recommended a six-month extension of the mandate of the UN Interim Force in Lebanon.

Students forge world-wide radio link

By NORMAN GIDNEY

A project of the downtown Victoria Kiwanis club will link the students of Pearson College this fall by ham radio with their relatives and friends in their native countries around the world.

First suggested by newborn ham Rev. Bert King of Metropolitan United Church, the idea was enthusiastically endorsed by the Kiwanis who will pay for the $6,000 worth of equipment needed to establish a ham station at Pedder Bay.

A 70-foot tower will be erected on the hill behind the college and a room has been set aside in the Max Bell auditorium to house the equipment.

"It will be operating in the fall," Rev. King said in an interview. Victoria ham radio operators have volunteered to put together the equipment and Chas Ryan, a local Department of Communications inspector, has agreed to sponsor the group.

The students even have their call letters reserved already — VE7LPC, for Lester Pearson College.

It's more than just a grown-up CB radio rig which the Kiwanis are providing for Pearson College. Students will have to meet the strict Canadian government regulations for ham radio operators.

They must learn Morse code and be able to transmit and receive at a rate of 10 words per minute without mistakes. Prospective hams must also write exams in theory and regulations and achieve 70 per cent or better.

There's a technical problem in that only Canadian citizens may receive ham radio licences, but there are Canadians among the student body at Pearson College and director Jack Matthews will also take the ham operator's course. Victoria ham operators will give instruction at Pearson College, so the station can be used under their supervision.

The requirements sound onerous, but Rev. King said he earned his licence in six months, getting up at six o'clock every morning to fit in study time.

Pearson College hopes to link up with the other two world colleges affiliated with the Pedder Bay school. Matthews said he's just learned Atlantic College in Wales is about to get a ham station.

Rev. King said the Kiwanis will try to get a service club in Singapore to sponsor a similar project for the college there.

The idea grew out of a Christmas visit to the King home by a Pearson College student. Rafael Niakra of Kembi, Papua-New Guinea, stayed the holidays with the Kings. Rev. King showed him his ham set.

"He got interested in it," he said. Niakra wrote home to learn there was a ham operator in his hometown, who replied with details about times and frequencies he operated. King got fellow Victoria ham George Bamfield to listen in one day.

Bamfield found no trouble picking him up. He didn't break in to talk, but it would have been a simple step to contact him and patch him through on a telephone hookup at this end to one of the Pearson College students.

"I got to thinking, wouldn't it be interesting to have a ham radio station at Pearson College, with 200 students from all over the world?"

Thus was born the Kiwanis project.

College director Jack Matthews said Pearson students are looking forward to the fall when the station will be set up. He said some of the physics students there could probably take their exams after only a month of instruction, which would allow them on the two-metre band.

Use of the 10-metre band which carries around the world requires another four to six months use of Morse.

Rev. King, 560 Beace Drive, became interested in ham radio because he wanted a challenging but out-of-the-ordinary hobby. Ham radio has more than met his expectations.

"I just got my licence last October. I wanted to learn something completely different."

It's opened up a whole new world and provided a different outlook on things. Ham radio has shrunk the globe for Rev. King and introduced him to a technology most people think of as glorified Citizen's Band radio.

Most hams would sneer at this comparison; they consider ham radio the Cadillac of CB. They are very much two different things.

A few weeks ago Rev. King was listening to someone in Alert, 450 miles from the North Pole, talking to a base in Antarctica. Another night he talked with a ham in Johannesburg, "just as clearly as I'm talking to you now."

There's tremendous clarity and none of the staticky clutter CBers are subject to. The rules of the air also enforce considerably more politeness. One obcene word and a ham can lose his licence, Rev. King said.

Advances in technology by the Japanese have led to the development of a miniature ham set that is a portable, battery-operated hand held unit no bigger than a walkie-talkie.

Biker still unconscious from flight after crash

A 38-year-old Victoria man remains unconscious in Royal Jubilee Hospital today with severe head injuries he received when his motorcycle collided with a car in the 1000-block Caledonia Friday night.

City police said Albert James Wright of 1728 Lee Street was hurled about 16 metres through the air following the rear-end collision with a car driven by John Morgan of 2938 Graham.

A spokesman said Morgan had stopped to let another car pull out of a parking space when the mishap occurred at 8:18 p.m.

When police arrived Wright was lying face-down on the sidewalk near the Royal Athletic Park box office with two persons attempting to administer first aid to him.

Officers were unable to find a helmet and presume Wright was not wearing one.

Wright was taken to Victoria General and later transferred to RJH for a brain scan.

In other accidents, about $13,000 damage was done in a six-vehicle smashup at Craigflower and Tillicum at 1:30 p.m. Friday.

Esquimalt police said all of the cars were eastbound on Craigflower when a car collided into the rear-end of the one in front, pushing it ahead into another and so on in a chain-reaction.

Two persons received minor injuries.

The driver of the first car was taken into custody and was to appear in provincial court today charged with impaired driving.

Sooke museum expands

Sooke Museum will unveil three new exhibits Sunday including one of the only operating steam donkey engines on Vancouver Island and a blacksmith shop.

Opening ceremonies will be held at 2 p.m. at the museum grounds off Sooke Road with Yorke Edwards from the Provincial Museum and MP Jim Manly on hand.

The donkey engine was restored by the Sooke Region Historical Society which also operates the museum. The engine was built in 1911 and used in the Sooke area for pulling logs.

A blacksmith will be on hand Sunday and other weekends throughout the summer.

The third new exhibit is the original lens from the Sheringham Point Lighthouse near Sooke.

The museum invites anyone interested in the new exhibits to attend the opening and a salmon barbecue

Saanich police reach tentative agreement

Saanich police reached a tentative agreement on grievances with the police board in the early hours of this morning.

Mayor Mel Couvelier said after the long Labor Relations Board negotiating session finished that an agreement had been reached but no details would be announced until after both sides had an opportunity to present the details to their members.

The police board will meet Monday, said Couvelier, probably at an in camera session to consider the agreement.

The police association will meet Tuesday.

The LRB hearing was requested by Couvelier Thursday following an hour long walkout Wednesday by police.

The walkout was held to protest the board's delays in dealing with four long-standing grievances of the police, said association representative Sergeant Phil Jamieson.

The hearing was called to deal with the main grievance: a question of whether police members are required to fill in for communication operators.

The police board insisted the association provide a member to man the communication system when the regular communication operators were on breaks or vacation and illness leaves.

The police association objected, saying the matter had been resolved at a LRB hearing last year when the decision was that police members are not part of the communication staff.

Escaped con nabbed

Shawnigan Lake and Duncan RCMP have recaptured a 20-year-old prison escaper who has been at large from the Slave Lake camp near Mission since May 2.

A Duncan RCMP spokesman said Christopher Joe Boivin was nabbed as he was returning to a hidden camp site at the end of Mile End Road in Cobble Hill early Friday morning.

Several officers, including the Colwood RCMP tracking dog-team, had lain in wait for the escaper, wanted on a Canada-wide warrant, after an informant told police Boivin was living in the area.

The arrest was made without incident.

The spokesman said Boivin has been charged with a June 5 breakin at the Dobson apartments in Duncan in which $150 cash was stolen.

Boivin is scheduled to appear in court in Duncan on Monday.

Injunction hearing set

The B.C. Supreme Court will deal Tuesday with a B.C. Hydro request for an injunction to stop Carl Rising-Moore of Powell River protesting the Cheekye-Dunsmuir power project.

Hydro wanted the hearing Friday but it was delayed to allow Rising-Moore time to prepare a defence.

Attack on girlfriend nets 8 years prison

A 24-year-old Malaysian student was sentenced in Victoria county court Friday to a total of eight years in penitentiary for attempted murder and related offences involving his former girlfriend Nov. 8.

Judge Frederick Melvin, in sentencing Kian Hock Koh, also known as Fabian Koh, said it was a very, very brutal attack on Nancetta Lorraine Kobe, 20, which cried out for a considerable period of imprisonment to reflect the court's repugnance.

Melvin found Koh guilty of attempted murder and sentenced him to six years and guilty of using a firearm while attempting to murder her and added two years. Koh received two years concurrent on each of two other offences, possession of a rifle and possession of a knife for a purpose dangerous to the public peace.

He said Koh was fortunate that he did not find himself guilty of murder because Kobe suffered a loss of 40 per cent of her blood.

Melvin said he considered, in sentencing Koh, the emotion-charged background, rehabilitation, deterrence of him and others, his reactive depression and seven months in custody as well as the manner in which the attack was carried out.

This, he said in convicting Koh on all four counts in the indictment, involved obtaining a single-shot .22-calibre rifle, sitting in his car with it, threatening to shoot her, following her into a Cook Street apartment, firing twice, necessitating reloading, injuring her in the back and mouth, leaving the scene and returning with a knife and inflicting neck wounds and then fleeing when interrupted, cleaning himself up and discarding the weapons.

Melvin dismissed three psychiatric-psychological grounds of defence saying Koh was sane at the time of the offences and he acted intentionally and meant to cause death to Kobe or meant to cause bodily harm and was reckless whether death occurred or not.

Defence counsel Dermod Owen-Flood said outside court he is considering an appeal of both the verdicts and the sentence.

In his summation, Crown counsel Wayne Smith said the injuries were extremely serious and only the miraculous intervention by passer-by Darryl Scott Alsbrook, 37, a medic in Viet Nam, saved her life. He applied pressure to her slashed throat to reduce the bleeding.

He said there was planning and deliberation and it was a brutal and cowardly act.

Owen-Flood said Koh was a young, very dependent person who was certainly mentally upset and he asked for a sentence in the lower range of probation to life which would allow him to return to his home country.

He said Koh has to be kept in protective custody in prison because he is suicidal as a result of his mental condition and because he would be beaten and otherwise abused by prisoners.

No trace of safe

City police have drawn a blank in their search for a safe stolen from the Little Gem Grocery, 148 Superior overnight Thursday.

The safe, an older black model measuring 2½-feet by two feet by two feet and weighing about 350 pounds contained 84 postal money orders, a large number of stamps, $140 in silver, and an undetermined amount in bills.

The thieves also got away with a number of lottery tickets kept in a drawer in another part of the store's office, $70 cash in an envelope in the same drawer, and two postal imprinter plates for the money orders.

Entry was gained through a window at the rear of the store. A dolly was used to cart away the safe. It was found on Kingston Street where police believe the thieves loaded the safe into a car.

The stolen money orders have serial numbers in sequence from 365867517-600 inclusive. Most of the lottery ticket numbers are also recorded, except for some Western tickets whose last three numbers won in the June 11 draw and which had been turned in for five free tickets. Those tickets could be used again for free tickets, police said.

MIKE ELCOCK . . . leaving post at UVic

New challenges beckon Elcock

Mike Elcock, the free-spirited Scot who took University of Victoria athletics from "a hip-pocket operation" to the highest level of respect in Canadian intercollegiate circles, is leaving his post.

Elcock, 35, formally announced his resignation as UVic's Manager of Athletics and Recreational Services on Friday.

His leaving typifies his free-spirited nature. There is no reason, except "to look for new challenges."

"I need something else," said Elcock. "In another year or two, I would feel trapped. This is a good place to work."

Hired in 1971, Elcock was instrumental in building and nurturing an athletic program that has grown and expanded from a catch-as-catch-can operation headquartered in the Old Gymnasium to its present effective and successful level in the new McKinnon Building.

In his nine years, Elcock also was involved in formation of the Canada West University Athletic Association as well as steering UVic's recreational and intramural sports to one of the most successful campus programs among Canadian universities.

"My main objective has always been to try and place the concept of sport and recreation on a solid footing and have it as an essential and integral part of campus life. I think we have accomplished this and are well on our way to realizing the potential that we have in the field," he said.

There is no doubt Elcock will be missed.

Elcock, said Ted Sawchuck, the Director of Student and Ancillary Services, "has that great ability to attract some extraordinary, talented people to the university."

Rowing coach Al Morrow, rugby coach Bruce Howe, basketball's Kathy and Ken Shields, soccer's Brian Hughes, field hockey coach Jenny John and track coach Ron Bowker are only a few of the talented "people" lured to UVic. Their reputations extend far beyond the Gordon Head circle that is the UVic campus.

Elcock has no plans. He will remain on the job until Aug. 31, then "look around." He owns an apartment in Glasgow and will visit Scotland but plans to return to Victoria because he is building a home in Sooke.

Sawchuck said Elcock's resignation could lead to changes in the university's athletic department, perhaps a re-organization. "Nothing has been planned," Sawchuck added, "until we take a good look."

Elcock also will be missed by Victoria's media. He never was overbearing or demanding, but always willing and co-operative, with straight-forward answers to straight-forward questions.

Among a minority in the media, annual snooker confrontations with Elcock and Ken Shields have been a highlight of UVic's meet-the-coaches press conference in the fall.

Would Elcock's replacement be able to shoot pool?

"A man's pool-playing," replied a startled Mr. Sawchuck, "has never been a criterion for university employment. But perhaps we should consider it. Sometimes it can be the mark of a good street-fighter."

And Mike Elcock, adequate with a cue, was a bit of a street-fighter. A good one.

Shamrocks deal to acquire Fulton

Victoria Shamrocks, with a roster thinned by three injuries, are hoping to introduce a new man next week.

The playing rights to Jack Fulton, a 24-year-old forward who performed with New Westminster Salmonbellies last season, has been dealt to Victoria's Western Lacrosse Association team.

In return, Shamrocks gave up their first draft choice in 1981 to New Westminster.

Fulton, who scored 35 goals and 38 assists as a rookie last year, now works at Crofton. His job on Vancouver Island opened the door on the deal. Now, says Shamrock president Ted Espley, Victoria has to persuade Fulton to turn out.

"He has signed a playing form," said Espley, "and that could make a difference. He was a little worried about coming out in mid-season but we're not in a position to enjoy that luxury."

Tej Labh has been sidelined with a broken hand, Jim Boyd is out with a knee injury and Dan Green has a broken knuckle.

Aroused Bear making mighty bid to construct bigger golf mountain

By WILL GRIMSLEY

SPRINGFIELD, N. J. (AP) -"Never awaken a sleeping bear."

Lee Trevino said it and he was referring to the gilded one, Jack Nicklaus, making a mighty bid for his fourth U.S. Open golf championship and a 16th major pro title.

"The man really wants it — you can see it in his eyes, his walk, everything he does," added Trevino, one of the blue ribbon challengers going into the showdown final two rounds today and Sunday.

"It wasn't smart to make him mad."

The razor sharpness of Jack Nicklaus's competitive edge, the fierceness of his pride and the depth of his determination pervades every one of the 7,013 yards of the tough old Baltusrol course where champions have battled it out for generations.

With rounds of 63-71 — 134, the Golden Bear took a two-stroke lead over the field into the final 36 holes.

At a news conference earlier this week, a radio announcer asked Jack if he would mind commenting on the self doubts he had expressed about both his golf and his career.

"I have no comment about that," Nicklaus responded tersely. You could see him bristle.

"I meant in relation to your record-tying 63," the broadcaster insisted.

"I repeat, I don't intend to talk about it," Big Jack snapped back. "I don't want to dwell on the negative."

Over the last 18 months, Nicklaus, whose accomplishments are among the best in golf history, has become increasingly impatient with efforts of some critics to paint him as a doddering, nerve-wracked old man ready to donate his clubs to the museum.

Why hasn't he won a tournament since 1978? Is he getting the putting "yips" that forced Sam Snead to shift to a side-saddle stance, that sent the great Ben Hogan into retirement and dulled the recent years for Arnold Palmer?

Will he quit soon?

"No," is the emphatic response.

"I will quit when I can no longer be competitive," Nicklaus has insisted over and over.

"I don't want to scale new heights, I just want to build a bigger mountain," he adds, referring to his desire to add to his astounding pile of major professional crowns, golf's recognized true mark of greatness.

He has 15 of them — Masters, British and U.S. Opens, and PGA — to gild his cache of 66 tour victories and more than $3.5 million in prize earnings.

Closest to him among his contemporaries is Gary Player, with nine.

Not in months has Jack been this near the summit of that mountain again.

Nicklaus is 40 years old, going on 25. At 5-11 and 170 pounds, he is as lean and fit as a schoolboy. He follows a strict regimen of diet and exercise, jogging largely.

His health, he insists, has never been better. He is relaxed and happy. He has refined and re-refined his game to his liking. The pros say they've rarely seen him hit the ball with greater authority.

He is longer off the tee than he's been in several years. His iron play is grooved.

Ranked 146th in putting in the pro statistics, he has putted with much more confidence in this year's Open.

Nicklaus's ego has been pierced by repeated references to Tom Watson, leading money winner and player-of-the-year for the last three years, as the successor to his dynasty.

After Friday's second round, Watson was asked what he thought of Nicklaus coming alive again in this U.S. Open.

"I never felt he was dead," Watson replied. "I always have felt and said that Jack would come back and win more tournaments."

Pursuing Nicklaus today from two strokes back at 136 were Lon Hinkle, Isao Aoki and Mike Reid and Keith Fergus, steady tour players who have been playing well lately but have no U.S. tour victories.

Mark Hayes, a three-time winner in his eight years on the tour, was three strokes behind Nicklaus, while Weiskopf lost five strokes to par Friday and shared the 138 slot with Pat McGowan.

Watson, the pre-tournament favorite, birdied No. 17 and eagled No. 18 to shoot a 68 Friday to go with his initial 71 to join Pete Jacobsen at one-under-par 139, a position Watson believes puts him in contention for the final two rounds.

Trevino, a two-time Open winner, was among a group of eight at even-par 140 that included defending champion Hale Irwin, J.C. Snead and steady Gene Littler.

It's time someone got the message

Times News Services

Warren Cromartie figures that sooner or later someone will get the message.

For the second game in a row Friday night a Montreal Expos' batter was walked intentionally in order to pitch to Cromartie and the 26-year-old first baseman foiled the strategy for the second time.

"You have to gear yourself up and say that sooner or later this stuff has to stop," said Cromartie after stroking his fourth straight single in the seventh inning to score Rodney Scott with the winning run in a 4-3 National League baseball victory at Montreal over Los Angeles Dodgers.

Scott had reached base with an infield hit after one out. When Brad Mills moved him to second with a groundout, Los Angeles manager Tommy Lasorda ordered reliever Steve Howe, 1-3, to issue an intentional walk to Gary Carter, who had not had the ball out of the infield in three trips to the plate.

Cromartie promptly lined a single to centre field and the Expos had their 10th straight victory, tying a club record and maintaining their two game lead over Pittsburgh Pirates in the East Division.

The Pirates kept pace as Willie Stargell turned two Joe Niekro knuckleballs into a pair of two-run homers Friday night and ended Houston Astros' eight-game winning streak.

"Let's just say the man can hit," said Niekro, who also served up a one-run single to Stargell in the Pirates' 5-3 victory in Pittsburgh. "Home runs beat me against this club."

Britain hit with fine for brawling by fans

ROME (AP) — The European Soccer Federation fined Britain $18,500 Friday for brawling by its fans during the England-Belgium international soccer game Wednesday night.

The federation's three-member disciplinary committee said it levied the fine against the British Soccer Federation for the "violent and dangerous behavior of its fans" during the European Soccer Cup match in Turin.

It said the fighting forced suspension of the game in the 42nd minute of the first period and police had to intervene. The British federation may appeal the fine within three days.

Thursday night, British and Italian fans fought near the railway station and in downtown cafes. Three Italians and one Briton were taken to hospital for injuries and 10 Britons were ordered home by police.

City rowers fourth

LUCERNE, Switzerland (AP) — Canada and the United States scored upset victories in the women's finals of a star-studded international rowing meet dominated by the East Germans today.

Andrea Schreiner of St. Catharines, Ont., won the women's single sculls by edging American Joan Lind in a thrilling finishing sprint.

The U.S. captured the eights, beating a strong East German team 3:01.12 to 3:01.84. Romania was third and Canada fourth. The Canadian team included Katie Burke of Victoria.

The Canadian men's double scull team of Bruce Ford and Pat Walter, both of Victoria, was fourth behind a pair of East German entries and Czechoslovakia.

Pro Blues capitalize on juniors' mistakes

Victoria Blues, taking advantage of the opposition's mistakes, are the first winners of baseball's Mayor's Trophy.

The professional Northwest League team's hitters cranked out 12 hits and capitalized heavily on eight errors to defeat Merchants, Victoria's entry in the Pacific Coast Junior League, 14-3 in Friday's benefit game at Royal Athletic Park.

Blues, who launch their 1980 campaign here Tuesday against Walla Walla, wind up their exhibition schedule tonight by facing a senior all-star team in Nanaimo.

Friday, Blues switched batteries with their junior rivals. Starter Doug Bull took credit for the victory while Mike Otto, the first of three pros who toiled for Merchants, suffered the loss.

Bull, Larry Wedgewood and Dean Potter had greatest trouble with Clay Bertoia, who went three-for-three for Merchants, stole one base and drove in two of his team's three runs.

Outfielders Lozando Washington and Nick Belmonte paced Blues' offense with three-for-four performances. Washington's total included a triple and three runs-batted-in while Belmonte, a holdover from last year's Mussel team, connected for a pair of doubles and two rbi's.

The exhibition attracted a crowd of about 400 fans.

DIANE PHILLIPS . . . playing with confidence

Phillips captures first city crown

The new Victoria women's golf champion will not be able to try out for British Columbia's interprovincial team.

But Diane Phillips, playing well after a slow getaway this year, isn't worried and would rather enjoy the fruits of her first major victory.

The golfing nurse, a member at Uplands, captured her first city title Friday by defeating Joanne Smith two up in the match-play final at Cedar Hill.

She did it by turning back a dramatic comeback attempt by Smith.

Phillips led all the way. Winning the second, fourth and fifth holes for an early three-up advantage, Diane made the turn two up, scoring an approximate medal of 35 to Smith's 37. After winning the 14th, Phillips was four up with four holes to play.

That was when Smith, a former Kamloops junior returning to competition after about a 10-year layoff, made her charge.

Smith started out by scoring a birdie on the par-three 15th, then kept her hopes alive by winning 16 and 17.

She couldn't keep it up and conceded Phillips her victory on the 18th.

Smith, 1979 city champion Dorothy DeGirolamo and Pat Derry are Victoria's only candidates for representation on the interprovincial team. Phillips is not eligible to compete in the trials that got under way in Vancouver today. Trials are restricted to golfers with handicaps of six or less, and Phillips is playing to an 11.

Her recent performance belies her handicap.

"I had a bad start this year," she said. "This tournament has given my game a big boost."

Actually, improvement showed up a few weeks ago in the Mid-Island tournament at Nanaimo. Diane finished fifth overall, but was the leading Vancouver Island player despite the fact "I did not putt very well."

Battery with a charge back with the Budgets

It's been a while since Victoria Budget fans have had a chance to see Rob Guenter and Bob Burrows in action, but the potent battery is going to be around to supply some of the charge this weekend.

Both will be in the lineup for Victoria's Northwest Men's Fastball League games at Royal Athletic Park. Budgets face Vancouver Thirsks tonight, starting at 7, and tackle Clearbrook Four Stars Sunday, starting at 1 p.m.

Because of commitments with the Canadian champions from Niagara Falls and the recent death of his brother, Guenter has missed the past three weekends. The big pitcher, however, returned to Victoria this week, worked out Wednesday and is expected to start in at least two of the four games.

Burrows has played six road games since recovering from an arm injury but has yet to play at home. The big catcher-first baseman didn't lose his batting eye. He slammed out four doubles and two singles, reached base nine times in 15 trips to the plate and scored four runs in games last weekend.

While Burrows and Guenter are available, outfielder Reg Underwood and shortstop Warren Campbell are doubtful staters. Campbell sufferd a foot injury while Underwood is nursing a knee injury.

John Green will handle shortstop duties while his normal duties at third will be shared by Norm Goudie and Randy Benn.

Budget batting statistics:

Super-stocks return tonight

For the first time this season, local super-stocks will be in action tonight at Western Speedway.

And a full slate of jalopy and stock car events will round out the program that starts at 7 with time trials.

Earlier this season, there were not enough super-stock drivers with completed vehicles to present a full race program and they were dropped from the schedule.

A field of 10 super-stocks has been guaranteed and there is a possibility of as many as 17 turning out.

Among the veteran returnees is Sooke's Joe Musfelt, who has given up the expense and travel of open competition to concentrate on the local track.

Others coming back are Larry Pollard, who will be at the wheel of a redecorated 1972 Nova, Tony Burrows, Ernie West, Zeigy Sawatski, Sonny Bienvenu and Gary Bemister.

Three rookies — Al Vanderbyl, Craig Dyson and Billy Hitchcox — will try to bump off the vets.

Leaders stage sub-par finish

DANVERS, Mass. (AP) — First-day leader Dale Lundquist and Beth Daniel, 1979 rookie-of-the-year, both broke par on the 18th hole Friday to wind up in a tie for the lead at six-under 138 after the second round of a $150,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

First, Daniel sank an eight-foot putt for an eagle on the 492-yard finishing hole to catapult over Pat Bradley, whose consistent round of 69 had given her the temporary lead at 139.

About an hour later, Lundquist also came to the 18th green with a shot at an eagle, but her putt from 20 feet lipped the cup and she tapped in for a birdie.

Daniels's eagle gave her the best round of the day, a 68. The birdie brought Lundquist in at 70.

After Bradley, there was a tie at 141 among Donna Caponi Young, Jo Ann Washam and Sandra Palmer.

Pam Higgins, who was in second place after shooting 69 Thursday, soared to a 74.

Daniel had bogeyed the 17th hole to drop out of a tie for the lead with Bradley, but on the par-five final hole, she hit a four iron within eight feet of the cup to set up the eagle.

Miles, Wylie among four in football's hall of fame

HAMILTON (CP) — Running back Virgil Wagner, who starred with Montreal Alouettes from 1946 to 1954, was named Friday as one of four inductees into the Canadian Football Hall of Fame.

Also named were running back Rollie Miles of the 1951-61 Edmonton Eskimos, defensive back Harvey Wylie of the 1956-64 Calgary Stampeders and John Metras, former coach of the University of Westen Ontario Mustangs.

It was the third such honor this year for Wagner. He was recently inducted to the hall of fame at his alma mater, Millikin University, and last February, was inducted to the hall of fame in his hometown of Belleville, Ill.

Wagner played on a powerhouse Montreal team that included such CFL greats as Sam Etcheverry, Alex Webster, Tex Coulter and Red O'Quinn. He is the only non-kicker to win four consecutive CFL scoring titles and was an all-star each of those years.

Metras is the first college coach to be selected. He came to Canada from Detroit Lions of the National Football League in 1933 to play centre and help coach St. Michael's College in Toronto before moving to Western Ontario, where he became head coach in 1940.

During 30 years as the football coach, his Mustangs won nine league titles, had a 110-77-11 won-lost-tied record and sent 157 players to the CFL.

Miles came to Canada in 1951 to play an exhibition baseball game with Boston Braves at Regina but the game was rained out and he stayed for a 12-year career with the Eskimos.

He was named an all-Canadian four times and a Western Conference all-star eight times — three as a running back, three as a defensive back and twice as a linebacker.

Wylie was a Western Conference all-star five times and twice selected as an all-Canadian.

He led the CFL for three consecutive years in kickoff returns and ranked second on the all-time list with 4,293 yards on 151 returns when he retired. He still holds the league record of five TDs on kickoff returns.

The four will be inducted officially at the annual hall of fame dinner Sept. 28.

Magnuson named Chihawks' coach

CHICAGO (AP) — Keith Magnuson, who spent his 11 years as a defenceman with Chicago Black Hawks, was named head coach of the National Hockey League team Friday.

Magnuson replaces Eddie Johnston, who was unable to come to contract terms after finishing his one-year pact with the Hawks.

The former defenceman retired last year after a knee injury limited him to only three games. He then served as assistant coach.

"It is too bad that our negotiations with Eddie Johnston didn't work out, but I have no hesitancy in turning the dressing room over to Keith," said general manager Bob Pulford.

Magnuson joined the Black Hawks in 1969 after playing at Denver University. He led the NHL twice in penalties and holds the team record of 291 minutes in penalties, set in 1970-1971.

Johnston, who said he was "only about $5,000 apart" in his contract negotiation with Chicago, expressed surprise and criticized Magnuson's "depenability" during his role as an assistant last season.

Pats seek new coach

REGINA (CP) — Bryan Murray won't be coaching Regina Pats next season.

Bob Strumm, general manager of the Western Hockey League club, made the announcement.

Murray refused to confirm that he was looking at a coaching position in professional ranks, possibly the Hershey Bears of the American League.

Murray was the fourth coach in as many seasons for the Pats.

TV OF THE FUTURE

YOU CAN SEE a new preview on Monday on Channel E (18) in Victoria Cablevision's Augmented Channels Service — the place where provincial educational TV will be in the not-too-distant future.

FOR THE FIRST time, a B.C. government branch will show on Channel E (18) a short instruction course. Starting at 10:30 a.m. on Monday, you can learn how to install red cedar shakes and shingles in a training program for building inspectors, prepared by the Building Standards Branch of the B.C. Ministry of Municipal Affairs. It will give you the complete picture in 2½ hours — materials, installation and problems.

CHANNEL E (18) is seen with any type of TV converter and you can get converters in many local stores or at Victoria Cablevision at 3690 Shelbourne. For all details, phone 477-1884 weekdays.

Parent takes title

VANCOUVER (CP) — Erv Parent of Seattle came from three strokes off the pace Friday to win the Pacific Northwest Golf Association seniors championship at Capilano Golf Club.

Parent shot a final-round 69, three under par, to finish with a 54-hole total 218, two-over-par. That gave him a four-stoke margin over Doug Bajus of Capilano, the leader after two rounds.

Parent had a six-over-par first round but came back with a one-under effort Thursday before capping his comeback with Friday's three-under tally. Bajus, meanwhile, ballooned to a 77.

Visitors trimmed in seniors' league

Glen Meadows, Gorge Vale and Victoria all took advantage of home-course knowledge Friday to score similar victories, 5-1, in the Vancouver Island Seniors' Golf League.

Victory enabled Gorge to retain a 1½-point lead atop the standings as Glen Meadows moved into second place, one point ahead of Victoria.

Cedar Hill 1, Glen Meadows 5

Jim Colier lost to Ed Bailey; Tom Halkett beat Lou Horne. Glen Meadows won four-ball.

Ed Craig lost to Vic Brown; Howard Tripp lost to Terrie Whitaker. Glen Meadows won four-ball.

Best-ever efforts by six at Sandown

For six of Friday's winners, the Sandown Raceway track was apparently in excellent condition.

Drivers Joe Hudon and Grant Hollingsworth both scored a pair of victories and Dance N Prance captured the featured claiming handicap, but it also was a notable evening for Claybrook Barry, Nevercantell, Count Force, Dante Vic, Commando Jove and Fort Dean.

Those six standardbreds all found the racing surface to their liking and posted their lifetime best times in scoring victories.

The meet's leading reinsman, Hudon closed with a rush to ring up his 28th and 29th victories. Hudon scored with Commando Jove in the eighth and came right back to win with Ford Dean in the ninth.

Hollingsworth boosted his total of winners to 24 by clicking with Nevercantell and Rays Golden Patch to move into second place in the drivers' race, one ahead of Keith Quinlan, blanked for the second straight day.

Dance N Prance, owned by Ruth McLean of Surrey, won her second straight race to win the featured 10th. Sheraton N, a recent acquisition by Mohan Jawl of Victoria, finished second.

Biggest payoff of the night came in the opening race when Hidden Time returned $56.90 to win and combined with Andys Wayne for a $162.20 exator return.

A crowd of 1,345 pumped $105,662 through the mutuels.

NICKLAUS IN OPEN

MONTREAL (CP) — Jack Nicklaus has confirmed his entry into the Canadian Open golf championship, June 19-22 at the Royal Montreal Golf Club.

BIDS FOR GAMES

CORTINA, Italy (Reuter) — Cortina, one of Italy's leading ski resorts, wants to bid for the 1988 Winter Olympic Games.

Leaders trounce Legion

NEW WESTMINSTER — New Westminster Junior Salmonbellies continued their winning ways Friday night, thumping Victoria Esquimalt Legion 16-7 in Western Canada Junior Lacrosse action.

Junior Salmonbellies, atop the league with 18 points, six ahead of Coquitlam Roadrunners, held period leads of 5-1 and 11-5.

Dan MacIsaac led New Westminster with three goals.

Victoria netminder Derek Croucher made 32 saves, while Gary Rudin blocked 27 shots and assisted on four goals for New Westminster.

Junior Salmonbellies were assessed 57 minutes in penalties; Victoria drew 31 minutes.

Labs again crack skein

But for Labatts, Victoria Athletics might still be working on one of the most impressive shutout records ever recorded in senior men's softball circles.

Athletics bounced Labatts 7-1 in Stuffy McGinnis Men's League action at Central Park Friday, but the consolation note for the losers was the lone run they scored.

The front-running A's racked up a shutout streak of 87 innings earlier when Labs broke it off in a 10-2 loss. Picking up again, Athletics ran their new string to 14 innings before a single by Barry Underwood and a triple by Dale Marshall snapped it Friday in the third inning.

Southpaw Mel Nelson gained credit for the pitching victory with a five-hitter.

Athletics also were winners in the Heywood Men's League.

Paul Bains, Bruce Kilbiski and Steve Coleman each banged out a pair of hits to support Bob Fletcher's four-hit pitching as the Heywood A's tripped Jack Mears Realty 5-1.

Harvey's Sporting downed Victoria Ambulance 10-6 in a Sidney Men's League game at Sanscha Park.

STUFFY MCGINNIS LEAGUE
Athletics 032 000 2 — 7 14 1
Labatts 001 000 0 — 1 5 3

Mel Nelson and Jim Boyd; Bob Richdale and Ross Barnett.

Canadians retain lead

MALMOE, Sweden (CP) — Terry McLaughlin of Toronto and Evert Bastet of Hudson, Que., retained the over-all lead in the Flying Dutchman sailing world championship by winning both races held Friday.

However, the Canadian pair and several other competitors missed a course change in the second race and officials were reviewing its ruling of the results.

West German brothers, Joerg and Eckart Diesch, remained in second place.

With DOROTHY FRASER

A treat for you and your visitors! . . .

It must be over a year since we last visited The Gallery Shop and we remember how impressed we were then! . . . But this week, making a return engagement, we were positively "boulversee," as the French say! . . . The Gallery Shop is a joy to visit . . . a delightful place to buy from . . . and a place you simply MUST take your out-of-town guests this summer . . . to ooh! and ah! over, and purchase those unusual things they'll want to take home with them! . . . Most of the crafts . . . with the exception of some hand-blown glass from Ontario . . . are B.C.-made . . . There are gorgeous hand-made dolls by Frances Hall of Vancouver that can be dressed and undressed . . . (one little cutie in pink velour is irresistible!) . . . Hand-made teddy bears too . . . and a lovely black mammy . . . Hand-crafted satin walnut jewel boxes and teak bowls by Douglas Steele . . . all cut in one piece, and incredibly beautiful! . . . Copper and brass trays, bowls, platters and coasters crafted by G. Farquehar of Victoria . . . David New-Small of Crescent Beach is represented in lovely hand-blown glass bowls, vases and paperweights . . . There are many choice potters . . . Walter Dexter . . . Rita Rowbotham . . . Eve Leader . . . Roger Stribley . . . Daniel Wright . . . and we just wish we had space to tell you about their individual beauties, but alas! . . . You'll have to go see for yourself! . . . The Gallery Shop, Art Gallery of Greater Victoria, 1040 Moss St., 384-7012.

Wetherall sale starts next week . . .

If timeless chic, exclusive styling, fine workmanship and superb quality are your criteria in selecting your wardrobe . . . we recommend you put a ring around next Thursday, June 19, on your calendar . . . and take yourself pronto to the Wetherall Shop in the Bay . . . That's the first day of their big summer sale . . . and from then until July 10, all their choice stock will be sold at reductions ranging from 20% to 60% . . . Here's your big opportunity to acquire prestige garments at hefty savings! . . . Wetherall, as you may know, use only natural fabrics . . . This year, for the first time, they've come out with 100% suit cottons for summer . . . co-ordinated blazers, waistcoats, skirts and jumpers . . . in blue, pink, off-white, sage green and gold . . . These things are all meticulously tailored and beautifully fitting . . . Skirts are either bias cut or pleated and most everything is lined . . . (And just to give you an idea of price, the $189 blazer will be reduced to just $75!) . . . And of course there are all the handsome reversible wool coats and capes for which Wetherall is famous! . . . We saw one lovely reversible coat in camel/beige, sage/white and grey/white marked as a promotion at $219 . . . a promotion cape at $217 . . . That handsome grey and white check cape with separate fringed scarf you may have admired at the Empress Fashion show last week will be reduced from $379 to $284 . . . Don't miss this very worthwhile sale at . . . Wetherall Shop, The Bay, 385-1311, loc. 295.

Meet some hairdressing stars . . .

"I will listen, I will care, I will advise, I will give my best!" . . . That's what Cynthia . . . an addition to the Hair Society's talented hairdressing team . . . told us when she took up her new duties recently . . . And from all we hear, she's been fulfilling these promises admirably! . . . Trained by one of London England's top stylists, she aims to give her clients the "total look" . . . She's enormously interested in the health of the hair, and will accept any challenge to improve a difficult head with problem hair . . . So do take note, all you people with hair problems! . . . Donna is a stylist of whom we can't speak too highly . . . Fashion news in shoes . . .

In the fall 1980 shoe fashion picture . . . PUMPS are the big news! . . . And not just pumps, but also pumps with the dainty little bows we used to wear a few years ago . . . As for heels, they're moderating in height, and are taking on a new slender look! . . . We gleaned this information at Munday's when we saw the first of their D'Antonelli shoes for fall this week . . . A very nice selection indeed! . . . A kid pump with a bit of a dip in the top line, slender high heel and a touch of a leather bow, comes in brown, and a nice deep taupey shade as well as in black suede . . . $73 . . . A dressy pump on the same heel height is suede with kid overlay trim . . . This in brown, grey and burgundy suede, priced at $75 . . . The burgundy, by the way, is a little deeper tone than last season, and it's becoming a basic color now, wearable with practically anything you can name! . . . On a little lower heel . . . what we used to call "illusion" . . . there's a marvellously fitting plain pump cut high with almost a choke look . . . In burgundy, dark brown or black kid, it's tagged at $70 . . . A well-tailored gored pump with high tongue and a touch of gold ornament is on a mid-heel . . . Gunpowder, burgundy or mid-brown, priced at $84 . . . And another on the same heel is suede with a leather kiltie tongue, mudguard trim . . . In burgundy or taupe at $85 . . . Munday's, 1203 Douglas St., 383-2211.

New ultrasuedes at Gibson's . . .

They're starting to come in . . . those oh-so-beautiful ultrasuede coats for fall, and we were lucky enough to get an early look at them at Gibson's last Monday . . . One new unlined coat is double-breasted and can be either buttoned up to a tiny collar, or left open at the top to form a lapel . . . Belt is twisted around . . . as opposed to passing through . . . a buckle, for a very new look . . . and colors are camel and a warm shade of mushroom . . . We also saw an ultrasuede coat in the new winter weight which has a fine wool lining underneath its silk lining . . . Slimly cut, double-breasted, and with boned lapel collar standing high through the back, this particular coat is in charcoal, but will be coming in about a dozen other shades . . . and it's a coat you'll be able to wear comfortably right through next winter . . . Speaking of coat shades . . . we hear that all shades of grey will be very predominant for autumn . . . closely followed by earth tones . . . From man-made . . . to God-made . . . suede, we can't resist telling you about a gorgeous doeskin shirt which caught our eye at Gibson's . . . Every bit as soft and silky as those doeskin things we saw in Istambul! . . . Washable, too! . . . Very classic and basic . . . cut like a casual shirt with a self-belt . . . it's camel color . . . Great topper for the tweed or grey flannel pants which you'll be seeing later on at Gibson's because pants will once again be making an impressive entrance this autumn! . . . Gibson's, 708 View St., 384-5913.

Zip up your cardigan

This past week I received a letter asking for advice on inserting zippers into a knitted cardigan. As so many reader's ask for this information, I thought it would be a good idea to make it the subject of a column.

When measuring for your zipper, lay the cardigan fronts out on a flat surface for measuring. You'll find it easier to put the zipper in before the garment is assembled.

Do not stretch the fronts, just pat them into shape after they have been pressed. Measure the length of the front opening, allowing for the zipper to be within half an inch of the lower edge, and half an inch of the neck edge.

Pin the tape of the zipper (when closed) to the fronts, working from the wrong side, pinning through the tape of the zipper into the knitting. If you pin from the knitting side your pins are apt to get lost within the knitting.

Be sure that the edges of the fronts are touching and covering the metal or plastic of the zipper. The fronts, however, should not overlap in any way.

Watch out for the top of the waist ribbing. See that this is even at either side of the zipper.

The same applies if there is any pattern to your cardigan. If there are stripes, they should match and not have one side higher than the other side.

Now again, working from the wrong side, baste the zipper in position along the tape. You'll find there is a pattern sometimes to the weave of the tape and this is helpful both for basting and matching.

Use a strong color for basting such as a red or purple, one that will show up easily as you are matching.

The basting should be in about a quarter of an inch from the metal part of the zipper. This allows the zipper foot free access to move up and down without snagging the knitted fabric.

I should have mentioned that taking the zipper right to the lower and neck edges will have a tendency to roll. That is why I advocate leaving half an inch at both the top and bottom of the opening free.

Knit this lovely cardigan for wear now, or have it ready for when summer will be over.

Patons Molana or Patons Vanessa are soft luxurious and fluffy yarns for spring, and this little cardigan and matching hat will be invaluable if you are vacationing near water, going camping or sailing. Instructions given are for size 32-34-36 bust measurement.

To order this week's Leaflet No. 0480 send 75 cents plus a stamped self addressed return envelope, long on if possible. Send to: — May E. MacLean, Knit & Chat, 486 Montford Dr., Dollard des Ormeaux, Quebec, H9G 1M6.

My catalogue along with information on needlework supplies is now available for 75 cents, together with a stamped return envelope.

Cardigans, attire for all seasons

Not just genital: report

TORONTO (CP) — Adultery should not be regarded as an automatic reason for ending a marriage, says a United Church of Canada report to be public Monday.

The report, by a 10-member church study group, calls for a broader view of marital fidelity and questions what it calls the prevailing view that fidelity means sexual exclusivity.

The meaning of fidelity in marriage encompasses far more than genital activity, it says.

Touching on other sensitive issues such as sexual fantasies and homosexuality, the report — which is not yet church policy — has sparked a furore among clergy and church members.

Heart lesson began at 40

WINNIPEG (CP) — Bernie Melman, a high school vice-principal, was the perfect candidate for a heart attack.

He lived and worked at a hectic pace, smoked too much and was overweight. Life was a long series of stressful situations.

"One day I found myself with phones to both ears, weighing 272 pounds and unable to climb the stairs without puffing," says Melman, 40, who is recovering from a major heart attack.

"You know, I used to think heart disease was a disease of the elderly. I found out the hard way."

The instant of the heart attack remains a vivid and horrifying memory — and the close call caused him to think seriously about the life he was leading. He now says there are few tasks which can't be put off until tomorrow. And he has learned to "stop tilting at windmills."

Melman is also helping himself by changing careers. He's resigning in June as vice-principal of Joseph Wolisnky collegiate and will start computer studies at the University of Toronto in September.

He says he will learn to live with a job he can handle.

Physical conditioning has become an important part of Melman's new life style. He has enrolled at the city's Kinsmen Reh-Fit Centre in a rehabilitation program for post coronary patients.

The course has 700 participants who learn about diet, exercise and the effects of smoking.

Patients who have suffered heart attacks need the support of family and community, says Akhardt Goertz, a social worker at Misercordia Hospital.

"They get support in the hospital and then they go home and they've got a whole load on them," Goertz says.

Patients who recover from a first heart attack are a long way from being healthy, says cardiologist Dr. John Rabson.

"Twelve per cent of heart patients suffer a second attack." he says. "One in three of these will die. But the farther you get away from the initial attack, the better your chances for survival and a normal lifespan."

Anesthetist Dr. Arnold Tweed, chairman of the Manitoba Heart Foundation's education committee, says too little is being done to educate the public about factors related to cardiac conditions, including high blood pressure, smoking, heredity, stress, lack of exercise and obesity.

He describes the victims, mostly men, as "type A personalities."

"(They are) achievers who drive themselves to reach goals, are mentally and physically alert, and caught up with a sense of urgency.

"Society has taught them if they master these qualities, they will reap the rewards."

Artist scores twice with 'spicy' menus

Local designer Peter Thornton-Trump has scored a double win in the annual Canadian competition for best design of a restaurant menu.

His designs are both hot items. They were done for rival East Indian restaurants in Victoria which feature curries and other spicy specialties of the subcontinent.

His caramel- and mustard-colored menu done for the Taj Mahal restaurant at 1681 Island Highway took second place in its category in the recent HostEx menu contest staged by the Canadian Restaurant Association.

That was for ethnic restaurants with entrees averaging $8.

(Taj Mahal may be better known to commuters and residents of the western community as the lounge behind Bob's Burgers. Both are owned by Gulshan and Abdul Adatia.)

Ironically, Thornton-Trump also designed the fourth-place winner in the competition, a menu for the Shah Jahan restaurant owned by Medat Hemani.

He also won awards in 1977 and 1978 for earlier designs of Shah Jahan menus.

Another irony: the Hemanis and Adatias are both Ugandan Asians who settled in Victoria after they were forced to flee their native Africa.

"We are a design studio and do a lot of menus," said Thronton-Trump, who has been in the graphic and commercial art business here for a decade, doing everything from package design to corporate image work.

"The restaurant business in Victoria is pretty substantial."

And also competitive — he expects the recent awards for the two Indian restaurants will bring further business from other restaurateurs looking for that extra edge over the competition.

Low-tar study urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — Smoking low-tar cigarettes may reduce the risk of getting cancer, but there is no evidence they cut the toll from heart and lung diseases and complications during pregnancy, experts on smoking said Wednesday.

The 75 doctors and scientists at a U.S. government-sponsored conference said little is known about the long-term effects of smoking cigarettes with low tar and nicotine levels. They urged more studies.

Some challenged the wisdom of government efforts to encourage smokers to switch to the so-called "lighter" brands, and one group called for stern new warnings to discourage women from smoking during pregnancy.

Dr. Lawrence Longo, a physiologist from Loma Linda University in California, said there is no evidence "to suggest that the developing fetus is less harmed by (these) cigarettes."

Longo said despite the reduction in tar and nicotine in cigarettes, pregnant smokers still run a 30 per cent to 70 per cent higher risk of spontaneous abortions.

Also, he said, they bear babies weighing 200 grams less than average, and run a 36 per cent to 47 per cent greater risk of a premature delivery.

He proposed putting a warning to pregnant women on cigarette packages.

How to clean up a dirty Little Guy

By DR. FRANK MILLER

Dear Dr. Miller:

How often can we bathe Little Guy? He's long and low. And a dirtier dog so quick you couldn't find.

N.D.

Dear N.D.:

Twice daily grooming with a brush and comb should help considerably. As far as the canine coat is concerned, frequent bathing needn't be detrimental — rather the opposite if the shampooing technique and the shampoo itself is appropriate. The shampoo should be mild and used cautiously around sensitive body areas. Even then it's vital to completely rinse all residual soap and debris from the skin and coat before calling it quits. This residue, rather than the bathing process, is often the cause for dry or irritated skin following bathing.

Dear Dr. Miller:

Birdie is a healthy, happy one-year-older. I know birds don't need shots but do they need anything from the vet unless they're sick?

A.F.

Dear A.F.:

True, birds do not need yearly boosters nor evenititial vaccinations. Nor do they need yearly checkups normally, particularly if the owner is a good observer. If you keep track of your own bird closely enough to know its normal habits and appearance, then you would know when your bird was eating less — there'd be less food consumed and fewer droppings. You'd know that the bird felt heavier or looked rounder or maybe even looked bigger in one area such as the breast (tumors in this area in birds are common). The observing owner knows when his bird is a little listless and "fluffed up" and can spot such indicators of trouble early. This is the desirable situation where the owner's aware enough of the bird's condition that should something change from the normal the bird could be taken in for a checkup to determine if a serious problem exists.

Because bird illness is rarely obvious in its early stages, the owner should either take the bird in for frequent physicals. Or, better yet, try to learn your own bird well enough to be able to spot a developing potential problem early, when the doctor has the best chance of doing something about it.

Dear Dr. Miller:

I'd adore a cat, but I'm allergic to cat dander. Do I have a prayer of finding a kitty that won't make my nose drip?

R.R.

Dear R.R.:

You've a fighting chance for a feline and a dry nose if you find a Rex. The Rex has no undercoat so is as sneeze-free as a feline pet can get.

Dear Dr. Miller:

Lately, our dog has been finding a lot of ticks, or vice versa. Then we have to find the ticks. The trouble is days after we get them off, there are these black holes in the skin with big red spots around them. What do these ticks leave in the skin to make it so sore?

E.S.

Dear E.S.:

Probably their heads . . . you're describing the skin inflammation and ulceration that occurs when a tick is pulled from the skin minus its partly buried head. That "black spot" is the head which is the cause for the severe skin reaction. Don't yank ticks off of your dog's skin. Instead, kill them by coating with petrolatum or with a commercial product (powder, spray or a dip). Commercial products can help prevent future tick infestations, too. Preferably take your dog on tickless trecks and trips.

You're in Love!

Right now, you're suffering from a severe case of intense happiness. On impulse, you'd buy her the moon if you could get it at half price. And why not?

But if you're thinking of a diamond, please come down to earth temporarily. Then come to Birks. For 100 years we've been prescribing the perfect ring for people in your condition. Most of them have loved happily ever after!

abby

Dear Abby:

A while back you had a letter from an employer who resented having his telephone calls to others screened by a secretary. The stupidity and ignorance that make people believe they can invade anyone's work at a time of their choosing by simply picking up the telephone and calling is indeed remarkable.

After 30 years of professional life, I have concluded that one of the most difficult tasks in secretarial training is teaching office personnel how to handle telephone calls.

Alexander Graham Bell invented a wonderful instrument, but unfortunately he never anticipated the problem his invention would cause with its improper use.

When I get to heaven, I plan to discuss this with him in detail.

Physician

Dear Physician:

If there's a line to heaven, it must have an unlisted number, so I will have to wait to join you up there to hear the outcome of your discussion.

In the meantime, may I suggest the proper (and most tactful) way to screen telephone calls:

Caller: "May I please speak to Mr. Smith?"

Secretary: "May I tell him who is calling, please?"

(Never, "Who's calling?" Those four little words, "May I tell him," soften the demand to know who is calling and dispel the implication that only persons on a preferred list can get through to the boss.)

If the boss is out, unavailable, unable or unwilling to take the call, the secretary then says, "I am sorry, but Mr. Smith is unavailable at the moment, but if you will give me your number I will ask him to return your call." (She never says, "I'm sorry, but Mr. Smith is in conference." There is now way of saying those words without sounding pompous.)

An increasing number of busy executives are answering their own phones, having given their direct-dial number to only those they want to have it. If the call is a nuisance or inconsequential, anyone bright enough to be an executive will know how to terminate it quickly and diplomatically.

Dear Abby:

I recently met a charming woman who is new in town, and when we parted, I casually said, "I hope we can get together sometime in the near future."

She telephoned the very next day and said she and her husband would like to come to my home for lunch next Saturday! This shocked me, as I certainly did not intend for her to bring her husband. Also, I resented her inviting herself, so I said Saturday was not convenient for me. Well, she has been calling me daily to set up a convenient date!

If she is this nervy after only one meeting, what can I expect if we become better friends? Knowing how presumptuous she is, I would rather not get involved with her at all. How can this be handled tactfully?

Harrassed

Dear Harrassed:

Continue to find each suggested date "inconvenient." She will get the message eventually--I hope.

Dear Abby:

My wife sleeps in the raw. Then she showers, brushes her teeth and fixes our breakfast — still in the buff.

We're newlyweds and there are just the two of us, so I suppose there's really nothing wrong with it.

What do you think?

Ed

Dear Ed:

It's OK with me. But tell her to put on an apron when she's frying bacon.

Abby loves letters from her fans. Write in care of the Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4. Remember to enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for her personal reply.

No need to be confused

If all goes well, I should be giving birth to my first child in three months. My husband and I are diligent about going to school to learn the details of natural childbirth. Now the problem is coming up as to whether I should breastfeed the baby. I hear various opinions about this. Frankly, I'm confused.

Mrs. D.R.

Dear Mrs. R.:

As sure as the summer and winter equinox occurs, I can count on letters such as yours, all seeking some clarification of a problem that is really not too complicated. What makes it complicated is the pressure put on people by those who are absolutely fixed on the benefits of breast-feeding.

In some intellectual circles, it is thought to be a sign of special distinction to breast-feed a child. Such enthusiasts try hard to encourage their friends to do the same thing. Unfortunately, if pressure is too great, some women are made to feel guilty if they decide not to breast-feed their babies.

It is well accepted that breast-feeding has significant psychological advantages for both the mother and the child. It is believed that an emotional bond established during this period is important in the child's total development.

And from the physiological point of view, there is said to be some additional ingredients in mother's milk that is more advantageous to the child as compared to homogenized, pasteurized and fortified cow's milk. Mother's milk is thought to contain certain antibodies and other substances that are beneficial to the growth of the child and to the infant's resistance to some diseases.

But, in general, it is believed that the difference is not so signficant that it should be a source of distress or guilt to mothers who cannot breast-feed, or who choose not to.

You must examine the advantages and disadvantages of breast-feeding as they pertain to your own emotional needs and to your own lifestyle. If breast-feeding does not present any special social problems, by all means consider it. If, on the other hand, you find it socially or emotionally difficult, don't force yourself because you feel you must "prove" yourself to friends and relatives.

There is much gratification to be gained from the mutual interaction between a mother and an infant by breast-feeding. But there are also many other gratifications and interactions to be found in caring for an infant.

The one thing that you must be aware of is that infants fed on cow's milk flourish beautifully when they are surrounded by loving, caring parents.

Dr. Coleman welcomes questions from readers. Please write to him in care of the Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, V8W 2N4.

Astrological Forecast for Sunday, June 15, 1980
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You delineate emotions — you discover what and who means most to you. Accent on speculation, affairs of heart, quick changes, creative endeavors and children. Aquarius, Leo, Scorpio natives figure in lively scenario.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You get verification of value, ownership. Security is enhanced, if you are alert and ask right questions. Message will be clarified. Be aware of legal rights, permissions — and know when to close a deal, sale. Member of opposite sex proves interest, loyalty.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Relatives may seem to "converge." In actuality, Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons — related or not — help you decide important domestic and financial questions. Be diplomatic, consult family on special purchase.

CANCER (June 21-July 22); Define meanings, clear clouds of confusion, count your change. Protect assets, keep resolutions concerning safety measures. Pisces, Virgo natives play key roles. Accent on money, locating lost articles. You prove a major point.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take initiative, push across program in dynamic, original manner. What appeared to be a mistake will boomerang in your favor. Your fears, doubts will be dispelled. Capricorn, Cancer persons figure prominently. You get wish concerning a very special meeting.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Get off sidelines; you have plenty to contribute and others will be aware of it. Lunar cycle high — imprint style, accent original approach, independence, pioneer spirit. You complete important task. One who aided in past is due to make reappearance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Wish comes true, involves business and concerns loved one. Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently — you get to heart of matters and make valuable, new contact. Member of opposite sex is drawn to you and is none too discreet about it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Honor, reputation, career — these are spotlighted. You regain sense of direction — extrasensory perception also is back in working order. Cancer, Leo, Aquarius natives play prominent roles. You learn by sharing, teaching.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Popularity increases — invitations arrive concerning education, travel, publishing, long-range projects. Gemini, Virgo and another Sagittarian figure prominently. Expand horizons — be ready for invitation which will enhance social, professional prestige.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Stick to factual material — leave speculation for another time. Dig beneath surface. You could strike pay dirt. Be positive in connection with legal rights and permissions. You are likely to have an "occult" experience.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Plans are subject to change, very likely due to "hidden clause." Contract may be filled with loopholes. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius persons figure prominently. Be a shrewd observer. Avoid rushing to judgment.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): Seriousness of purpose could be tested — be sure of facts, get views on record. Improve basic services, procedures. Become more aware of nutritional requirements, needs of dependents. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio natives play significant roles.

IF JUNE 15th IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are charming, urbane, have active, intellectual curiosity, a compelling voice, a love of luxury, gourmet foods and you also have a "sweet tooth." Social life, travel opportunities have accelerated. You resolve emotional dilemma which plagued you last year. Now, in 1980, you have greater freedom to write, promote, advertise, publish and pursue educational project. You meet stimulating people — you make new start in new direction in July ... and you could fall madly in love. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons play important roles in your life.

Astrological Forecast for Monday, June 16, 1980
By SYDNEY OMARR

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Examine various possibilities, plans. Start dialogue with "special person." Learn where you stand in emotional arena. Gemini, Virgo, Sagittarius natives play significant roles. You are embarking on voyage of discovery — charisma soars, you could easily win popularity contest.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Home base commands attention. Accent safety, security — and beauty. Improve domestic life via gift, special consideration for family member, decorating, making room for "prize objects." Diplomacy wins; chiding or complaining leads to loss. Act accordingly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Obtain hint from Aries message. Define meanings, get answers to questions. Relative who appears evasive may be genuinely puzzled. Know it and don't press to point of embarrassment. Visit or short trip is on agenda. Someone who does care will whisper a secret.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Take restrictions in stride — find new methods of approach, go after story behind story. You discover motives — you are on right track. Ignore one who seeks to substitute age for knowledge. Your own wisdom proves reliable.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): What seemed a lost cause is back, playing a key role in your personal scenario. Lunar cycle encourages independence, direct action, confidence. Aries, Libra persons figure in scenario. You gain plaudits by completing a long-standing assignment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Light is shed on area previously shrouded in mystery or concealed. Key is discretion. You will be provided with privileged information. Protect your sources! Leo, Aquarius persons figure prominently. You will have chance for fresh start.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Teach, share knowledge, accept help from member of opposite sex. Conciliatory gesture makes your life more harmonious. Choice is your own. Accent on romance, fulfillment and a "remarkable coincidence." Cancer, Aquarius persons figure prominently.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Diversify, open lines of communication, deal with Gemini, Sagittarius natives. Emphasis on main objectives, opening dialogue with professional associate, superior. Humor is your ally. Demonstrate that you are capable of laughing at your own foibles.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): What you seek is not necessarily close, but it is available. Open lines of communication, make inquiries, gain overall view, perceive trends and become familiar with subtle, legal nuances. Aquarius, Scorpio percons figure prominently.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Check financial techniques, investment procedures, methods of accounting. Protect personal possessions. You may be due a commission which has been "conveniently" overlooked. Find reasons, be analytical, piece together puzzle pieces. You'll get complete story.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Accent on special purchase, legal affairs, publicity, expressing yourself in manner which can win allies from those who hold opposing views. Taurus, Libra, Scorpio persons figure prominently.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Steer clear of direct confrontations. Moderate pace results in "victory." Emphasis on basic chores, diet, dependents, getting together with one who shares your interests. Another Pisces and a Virgo play key roles in your personal scenario.

IF JUNE 16th IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are perceptive, spiritual and have way of aiding people who are in dire straits. Your intuition often provides answer connected with law and human relationships. You are alert, active, a perfectionist and your own worst critic. You make interesting, new contacts this month. In July, you regain sense of direction — there will be a serious, emotional involvement. Pisces, Virgo persons play important roles in your life. August is a month in which you travel, expand horizons, find unique ways of expressing yourself. You will be on more solid ground financially and otherwise before the year is finished. And you once again will know the meaning of love.

Gold jewellers fighting slump

FLORENCE (Reuter) — Recent wild swings in the price of gold have dealt a harsh blow to Italy's gold jewelry industry, the world's biggest.

Italian artisans and jewelry factories produced nearly one third of the world's gold jewelry output last year.

But they are suffering from a slump in sales this year because of high prices, which are pushing rich consumers away from gold toward other luxury articles.

"Italian gold jewelry exports could fall by half this year and domestic sales by one third," said Gian Carlo de Paulis of the International Gold Corporation.

Sergio Fineschi, managing director of Uno-a-Erre of Arezzo, the world's biggest gold jewelry factory, said sales were down by 40 per cent in weight so far this year.

Members of the world's gold jewelry trade met here recently to discuss their problems and possible solutions.

Prudent is the pruner

Pruning is an aspect of gardening which many people seem to puzzle over a great deal, particularly with respect to just when it should be done and how you go about it. The answers, of course, vary a great deal depending upon the subject.

A shrub that causes many home gardeners problems simply because they don't know when to set about the pruning job is the lilac which is so popular and common in home gardens throughout British Columbia and elsewhere across the country.

As a spring-flowering shrub, our old friend the lilac blooms on the previous year's wood. Because of this, it must be pruned after it blooms, removing all spent flowers and cutting the stems down to where two large buds are developing. This allows new wood to develop which will produce the next year's bloom.

At this time, any dead, old, spindly or crossing wood is removed so the lilac shrub will remain in good health and be pleasantly shaped as well. Even when lilacs are grown as a hedge, it is better to prune them in this way with secateurs rather than with hedging shears which can ruin their appearance by shredding the leaves and cutting with no regard to next year's blooms.

Most of the lilacs — the common lilac and the French lilacs — will produce suckers which must be dug out, usually in the fall, or in the early spring. This isn't my idea of the world's most delightful job but it must be tackled and it's just a matter of going after the suckers with a sharp spade, digging until you cut them out from their roots cleanly, close to the main trunk of the parent plant.

Remove the suckers in the spring or fall when the plants are bare of leaves, so don't tackle the job now. Leaving these suckers can cause poor blooming in the main plant and who would want to be deprived of those gorgeous, fragrant blooms for the early summer vase arrangements?

Because of our move last year to a new, previously uncultivated property, we had no lilacs of our own this year and we certainly missed those large, fragrant bouquets.

I should mention that the Chinese, Hungarian and Amur lilacs do not have suckers so if it is a matter of your establishing a lilac shrub or hedge around a new home, as is the case with us, it's nice to know you have the choice of varieties which don't bring with them this bothersome garden chore.

Another common pitfall for the overly anxious gardener lies in wait for the family wanting to grow a hedge for privacy. To get the kind of dense growth desirable in a hedge, it is vital to prune the young plants back to at least a foot above ground level at planting time. If the plants you buy are older, larger plants, then about one-third of their top growth should be cut back.

This pruning is essential for the dense growth at the bottom of the hedge that is so necessary if your hedge is to perform the job you planted it for in the first place. If this drastic cutting is not done at the beginning, chances are you never will have a very good hedge.

Once this dense growth is established, subsequent pruning is done with an eye to making the top of the hedge narrower than the bottom. This is for practical rather than aesthetic reasons.

For one thing, a narrow top will not hold a fall of snow the way a wide top will and in the event of a rare heavy snowfall in Victoria, extensive breaking down and mis-shaping of the hedge could occur. Another practical reason for a wide-bottomed hedge is to allow the lower regions of the plants to be exposed to sunshine, without which the bottom of the hedge will soon become marred with bare spaces as leaves and twigs die for lack of sun.

Avoid pruning your established hedge too early each year. The plants need their leaves to manufacture food for the health of the whole plant; cutting away a lot of leafy growth too early will start the plants starving.

Mid-June is usually early enough to prune — although I wouldn't dream of suggesting this is how Dad should spend his Father's Day — and fast-growing hedges will need another trim around mid-August.

Beachcombing getting mean

VANCOUVER (CP) — Mike Forrest revs his $25,000 boat and speeds toward a pair of low-floating logs in the Fraser River.

But another log salvor has spotted the prize and the scene is like something out of the CBC television series The Beachcombers as Forrest wins the race and quickly drives two dog lines — metal spikes attached to ropes — into logs that will net him about $25.

"I win as many of the races as I lose," says Forrest, who has salvaged logs on the Fraser from Haney to New Westminster for 19 of his 31 years.

"There used to be a certain amount of politeness involved in this business, but it's getting worse and worse as the market gets better."

There are more than 500 log salvors in the Vancouver Log Salvage District, which covers the Fraser River and the waters between Vancouver Island and the mainland, but less than half work full-time.

They sell their logs through the Gulf Log Salvage Co-operative Association, which represents major forest companies and insurance firms in B.C.

Log salvors received about $3.3 million last year from the $6 million worth of logs they brought in. About $1.2 million went to the log owners and the rest went for operating costs, provincial royalties and debris control.

Forrest divides his time between log salvaging and fishing, but is reluctant to disclose his income.

"People would look at it and say: 'Wow! It's all free.' But they don't understand all the expenses involved.

"We'd get a lot of guys out here who'd be out to lunch and they'd cause all sorts of problems."

Theft from company log booms is one of the biggest problems created by newcomers looking for easy money.

But thieves don't last long because forest companies use security vessels to guard their logs. Forrest says it's vital to remain on good terms with the log owners because they'll often pay for help in retrieving logs after a major spill.

The Fraser often is clogged with low-floating logs which salvors bypass because they're of low-grade wood and bring a small return.

Low-floaters are a hazard which Forrest knows only too well — he's hit six in the last four years that have caused $15,000 worth of damage to his boat.

The B.C. government has proposed changes in the payment schedule in the hope of encouraging beachcombers to pick up more low-grade logs, but salvors say they would end up earning less.

"People think we're greedy by just taking the big logs, but it costs us money to take the junk," Forrest says.

LOSE 5-14 LBS. IN NEXT TWO WEEKS WITH THE HELP OF THE

no nonsense DIET

In May of 1979 Natures own no nonsense diet was introduced to British Columbians and Albertans through the Prince Health Food chain. Within weeks they were sold out and by the end of July thousands of people had lost weight the no nonsense way.

Unlike most diets to have come along this one is not dying out, but gaining greater momentum all the time. The reason for this phenomenal growth lies inthe fact that those people who have tried the diet have gotten positive results. For example I know of one particular young lady who has been overweight nearly all of her life. She wanted desperately to lose 25 lbs., and tried every possible means over the last two years. She exercised, joined clubs and went to monthly meetings. All to no avail. After reading about the no nonsense diet, she decided to give it a try before throwing in the towel. It worked. Within a month she lost 23 lbs., within two more weeks she lost another 10 lbs. She is so ecstatic about this diet that she preaches it to anyone who will listen and has most of her friends on it.

The product is a dieter's dream; two tablespoons in a glass of partially skimmed milk is equal in nutrition to a complete meal. But without all those nasty little calories. It has all the essential amino acids, and Vitamins and Minerals in a delicious powder base. The no nonsense formula comes in two flavours, luscious chocolate and tasty vanilla.

Here is a list of the Vitamins and Minerals it contains:

Vitamin A
Thiamin
Choline
Iodine
Potassium

Vitamin E
Riboflavin
Calcium Magnesium
Manganese

Vitamin C
Niacin B6, B12
Phosphorous
Copper
Sodium

Vitamin D
Folid Acid Blotin
Iron
Zinc
d-Panothenic Acid

This is a wonderful diet because you are dealing with natural foods and not drugs, consequently it is safe and very healthy. A lot of people after going on this diet, have noticed remarkable improvement in their hair, skin and nails.

The no nonsense diet is available at these and other leading Retailers:

VISITORS WILL ENJOY
SALMON FISHING TRIP
with

Magna Charters Ltd.

They will enjoy having two skipper-guides aboard our comfortable, 44 foot, tri-cabin cruiser to rig the rods, select the lures, help the inexperienced, net and clean the salmon all ready for the barbeque.

They will enjoy the experience of seeing the electronic fish-finder at work and the thrill of the tug of a Pacific Salmon on the line. If they wish, they can relax in the roomy forward cabin or settle down at the dinette near the warm stove.

There is a lot for their cameras too; an osprey's nest, the Olympic Range, the old light house and the colony of sea-lions on Race Rocks, the new "egg-beater" windmill at Christopher Point and the gorgeous scenery at Whirl Bay and Church Rock. Also perhaps a sighting of the harbour seals, the otters that live in the bay or a passing pod of killer whales.

Our trips, early morning and afternoon, last a full four hours.

We are moored at Pedder Bay Marina, close to the best fishing grounds, a pleasant 35-minute run from town.

Parrott aims to strengthen trustees nationally

By PAUL MINVIELLE

PARROTT . . . greater goal

When Rubymay Parrott declined to seek a second term as B.C. School Trustees' Association president, some people speculated she would drop out of the education scene.

They were wrong.

Parrott merely had her eye on a wider target — the presidency of the Canadian School Trustees Association. On June 1 delegates in Montreal made her the nation's number one school trustee.

"I believe we need a strong national group," she says and few would doubt she intends tackling the task with the same fervor that became her trademark in 13 years as a Saanich school trustee.

Grabbing the national title doesn't conflict with her stated aim of having more time for her family.

"The national job is not nearly as time-consuming as the provincial."

Recently, at her home overlooking the Saanich Inlet, Parrott told the Times her views on various aspects of education.

On the BCSTA presidency:

"If I'd been elected to a two-year term, I'd have served two years."

But BCSTA presidents historically have served only one year, she said, and although there have been two exceptions to tradition, Parrott doesn't believe in the practice.

She feels if every president were to go after two single-year terms, he or she would spend much of the first year politicking.

She believes this happens in the B.C. Teachers Federation and perceives the practice as one of that group's weaknesses.

Why did she become a school trustee?

"We moved here (Central Saanich) from Oak Bay. At the time there was a two-room school, no gymnasium, no music program. We found ourselves in the back of beyond and we'd only moved 18 miles."

To insure her son got the opportunity she felt he and every child deserved, Parrott decided to run for Saanich School Board.

"I made it on the second try."

Has education progressed in the past 13 years?

"It sure has in Saanich. The program in Saanich is every bit as good as it is in larger centres. Because we're smaller we have that personal contact." She makes a point of not taking credit for it all but she takes pride in what has been accomplished.

How about about obviously incompetent teachers remaining in teaching posts?

"There have been some very unfortunate cases in the province but there are now procedures to deal with such cases."

Parrott said part of the problem is that principals are able to report on a teacher with only the words "satisfactory" or "less than satisfactory."

"That tends to hamstring principals," she said.

A district supervisor can tell a district superintendent a teacher is "excellent," "good" or "less than satisfactory."

An inquiry can be launched only if there are three "less than satisfacory" reports about a teacher's performance in a period longer than year.

"It's a very sensitive area. You're dealing with a person's most prized possession."

While incompetency is tough to deal with, breaking the law can mean instant dismissal.

What about the public's low opinion of education?

Parrott referred to a Gallup Poll conducted for the Canadian Education Association that showed Canadians didn't think much about teachers.

Teachers, however, were relatively satisfied with education in the country.

Parrott lays the blame for the B.C. public's attitude towards education at the feet of Pat McGeer.

"When he was education minister he never said one good thing about what was happening in education in B.C." Parrott charged.

"Strangely enough, since Smith (Education Minister Brian Smith) has taken over things are better."

The quality of education?

"The things we're doing for our children in B.C. are really exceptional."

Parrott said youngsters are being kept in school longer than they used to and she believes the average youngster is getting a pretty good education.

She thinks youngsters coming out of the system today are far more compassionate than their predecessors and have a greater understanding of the rest of the world.

What about the core curriculum?

Parrott would like to see continuing emphasis on the basics.

"If a youngster can't read, he's really handicapped. The same applies to basic math."

Parrott gives McGeer credit for focusing attention on the core curriculum, but adds: "It was already in place but he made everyone aware it was happening."

How about job training?

"I'd like to see more co-operation with industry," Parrott said. "I'm not sure our educational system can afford to provide industrial education. We're going to have to work closely with industry and unions to allow more apprenticeship programs."

She explained that technological advances are being made so quickly, it is impossible for the educational system to keep pace.

How does she feel about French education?

"We have some very good programs here in B.C. but the total French under McGeer was a little foolish. To set up a Francophone program for 10 students was a very costly way to go.

"But I believe French immersion programs are very good."

Other languages?

"I was thinking of Pacific Rim languages, perhaps Japanese immersion classes. Our students today have to live in the global village."

Parrott recalled Chinese classmates who left the regular elementary school and made their way over to the Chinese school on Fisgard Street. They got the same education as Parrott, plus a whole lot more.

Exchange programs:

"Many of our children don't have the opportunity to see Canada."

On a trip to Russia, Parrott noticed children from everywhere in the Soviet Union were visiting such important national sites as the Kremlin and Lenin's tomb.

"The Japanese are the same way and so are the Chinese," Parrott said.

Youth has to know its own country to understand it, she said, and she thinks student travel should be encouraged by trustees.

New teaching methods:

"Educational research gets done 10 times (once in each province) in this country, and what's needed is more correlation in the whole field."

As for new teaching methods that didn't work, Parrott said she believes most good teachers never got away from tried and true practices.

School sports:

"I have some real concerns about physical education," Parrott said, zeroing in on what phys ed proponents term "lifetime recreational skills," which involve instruction in such sports as golf, tennis and bowling.

"I think all that's doing is subsidizing bowling alleys and golf courses."

She insists if schools concentrate on offering basic educational skills and the ability and opportunity to go on learning, graduate students will pick up the recreational skills on their own.

Trustee effectiveness:

"Most trustees in the province of B.C. are becoming more competent and more effective in voicing lay concerns in education.

"Trustees are learning they are the last line of defence," she said.

Rubymay Parrott is the general now directing those defence forces.

Courier firm unionized?

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Retail Wholesale and Department Store Union has applied to the Canada Labor Relations Board to be certified as bargaining agent for about 30 delivery and pickup workers employed by Purolator at the courier service's Vancouver operation.

With headquarters in Toronto, Purolator is among several private courier firms which in May were preparing to pick up some extra business if there had been another national postal strike.

How does changing constitution affect cost of shirts?

By PAUL GESSELL

OTTAWA (CP) — Those who find the constitutional debate merely an esoteric and boring game of political poker should remember that tinkering with the British North America Act could change everything from the cost of shirts to the availability of American television shows.

Those politicians negotiating changes to the 113-year-old statute of the British Parliament are discussing the language in which children will be educated, whether or not a Newfoundlander has the right to work in the Alberta oil fields and the ability of the courts to track down an erring father who has stopped sending support money to his family.

These negotiations begin in earnest Tuesday in Ottawa, with Justice Minister Jean Chretien, the homespun lawyer from Shawinigan, Que., chairing discussions with his counterparts from the 10 provinces.

So just how does changing the constitution affect the cost of shirts?

It began with the Fathers of Confederation, who decided back in 1867 that the federal government should have the biggest voice in international and interprovincial trade. Some provinces, 113 years later, want a bigger say in what goods go where.

Federal dominance in trade matters has resulted in a situation today where Ottawa props up the textile industry, largely based in central Canada, by restricting the flow of more cheaply-priced clothing from countries such as Taiwan and Korea.

Taking this power away from the federal government would likely mean a greater availability of cheaper clothes, but greater unemployment in central Canada.

And how does changing the constitution affect your weekly viewing of Lou Grant, Dallas and Charlie's Angels?

Communications, including broadcasting, is another jurisdiction largely under federal control. Like trade, the provinces want a bigger piece of the action.

The federal government, trying to assume leadership in the promotion of Canadian culture, has often cast a much more wary eye than some provinces to the invasion of homes by American television and radio shows. Regulations forcing stations to maintain a certain percentage of Canadian content is one result of federal government control over communications.

Giving the provinces control of broadcasting and the burgeoning technology that allows viewers to pick up almost any station on the continent could make life more difficult for such Canadian television heros as the King of Kensington and the Friendly Giant.

There is hardly any aspect of life that is not potentially affected by changing the constitution. It runs the gamut from the price of gasoline to freedom of speech.

At the last full-blown constitutional conference, in February, 1979, the federal and provincial governments agreed in principle on only two issues — that the monarchy should remain and that family law should be handed over to the provinces.

This means the Queen will remain on stamps and coins, make regular visits to the Dominion of Canada.

As for family law, handing over more power to the provinces allows scrapping couples to have a one-stop divorce — becoming unhitched and fighting for custody of the children in the same court. It could also increase the difficulties of a woman trying to track down a husband who skipped the province and stopped sending support payments.

Twelve items have been placed on the agenda for discussions between Chretien and the provincial ministers.

Chretien said in a recent interview that a report will be made on each item, whether or not there is an agreement, and be submitted to a first ministers' meeting in Ottawa Sept. 8 to 12.

Prime Minister Trudeau has warned the provinces that failure to reach substantial agreement on the 12 items would be "a disaster" and could result in Parliament taking some as-yet-unspecified unilateral action to change the constitution.

Sherbrooke unions try bank squeeze

SHERBROOKE, Que. (CP) — Unions in the Sherbrooke area have begun withdrawing accounts from branches of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, a bank-workers' spokesman said Thursday.

Jean-Guy Provencal, spokesman for eight tellers locked out at Commerce branches in nearby East Angus and Bishopton since late April, told a news conference that the regional council of the Quebec Federation of Labor decided June 9 to withdraw about $80,000 in local union funds from the Commerce and encourage local members to boycott the bank.

The Quebec Federation of Labor is expected to announce a province-wide boycott later this month.

Provencal said the UFCW is urging it 25,000 members across Canada to boycott the bank,

On Friday bank spokesmen were unavailable for comment, but officials said Thursday the Commerce "would be disappointed" with a nation-wide boycott.

Healing topic of seminar

A teaching seminar, Your Healing is Within You, will be conducted by Rev. Jim Glennon, noted Australian teacher-healer and missionary, at St. Saviour's Anglican Church, Friday through Sunday at 7:30 nightly.

The series is sponsored by the Anglican Renewal Centre, and director Rev. John Vickers welcomes interested participants.

Glennon, ordained in Australia, went on to studies in England before returning to St. Andrew's Cathedral as precentor in 1955.

Since that time he has conducted a weekly service of divine healing missions throughout Australia and Nes Zealand.

Glennon, also the author of a noted book on Christian healing, will be the main speaker at the three-day seminar.

Church chronicles

The 106th general assembly of the Presbyterian Church in Canada was held at the University of Windsor in the first week of June.

Delegates from Vancouver Island were Rev. Robert Garvin of Port Alberni, Mrs. Gerry Verwey and Rev. Gilbert Smith of Victoria.

History was made as the entire Presbyterian assembly from Canada held a joint meeting with the 192nd general assembly of the United Presbyterian Church of the U.S. in Detroit.

Messages of goodwill were sent both to Prime Minister Trudeau and U.S. President Carter. The colorful and musical occasion was marked by the presence of many dignitaries and overseas delegates.

A massive ecumenical service was held in the Joe Louis arena with 10,000 people present, conducted bu moderators Drs. Charles Hammond and Alex McSween. It was addressed by Dr. James McCord, president of Princeton Seminary.

The St. John Ambulance Brigade's annual ecumenical church service will be held this year at St. Matthias's Anglican church, 600 Richmond, on Sunday, June 22, at 2:30 p.m.

Tea and refreshments will be served in the church hall after the service, and members will wear decorations and medals.

Members of the Victoria Seventh-day Adventist church will join in erecting a health education centre at Prince George this month—an intensive effort will result in completion of the building in 12 days.

It includes dentistal offices, a medical office, a counselling office and a basement convention-meeting hall.

A crew of 40 to 60 volunteers, not all of them Adventists, who pay their own transportation expenses to the project site, get free lodging and food in return for their efforts.

The helping-hand project, called Maranatha, greatly hastens the erection of needed buildings where a struggling local church otherwise might take many months or years to do the job.

Old, old story told new way

It's not how they told the story when you went to Sunday School—if you're over 21.

Not that they have altered the events of the biblical drama of David and Goliath in I Samuel 17, but what's different is the way they'll tell it at both Sunday morning services at Oak Bay United.

Forty-two youngsters from Emmanuel Baptist Church will sing and act the original story, to the 'religious rock' music of Albert Zabel and the libretto of Trilby Jordan.

Israelite and Philistine Army groups (Grades 3-5), and the Fee Fi Fo Fum army (kindergarten to 2) carry the story (and its modern message) by pithy and often amusing lyrics, while King Saul, David and other Israelites have individual speaking parts.

Goliath, of course, towers impressively over wee Davie.

The part of the story not found in the bible—but surely implied—comes at the end of the ½-hour presentation, and is almost certain to evoke a rock-style "right-on" if not a regular "Amen."

This musical drama is under the joint direction of Linda Martin of the Hosanna Singers and Fran Gower and Jeanne Boschma of Emmanuel's Primary Choir. Martin is president of the B.C. Chapter, Choristers' Guild.

The drama coach is Ivan Whitney.

Praise songs offered by choristers

Genesis Praise, a choir comprised of students from Genesis Fellowship in Corvallis, Oregon, will be at Trinity Christian Centre, 949 Fullerton, at the 6:30 p.m. service Sunday.

The choir's primary purpose is to present a ministry of praise songs that exalt Jesus Christ. They involve the audience in sharing the worship experience through the hymns, scripture songs, and worship choruses.

Appeal aids urban blight

Seventh-day Adventists hope to combine social action and brotherly love in a self-help program to ease the problem of inner-city blight, says Victoria church spokesman Kathleen Piper.

"The money given in our churches this week will help support inner city programs, including a new Better Living Health-Evangelism Centre in Greater Vancouver where a church-operated recovery plan for drug and alcohol addicts is under way.

Offerings today will also cover the work done by health-screening vans, tutoring classes for slow learners, and a program to reduce juvenile delinquency in cities in Canada and the United States.

Another outreach for the SDA churches in June offerings will be toward home missions—following the example of Jesus, who spent more time healing than he did in preaching.

Four Seventh-day Adventist institutions will get a helping hand from the membership in Victoria.

Northeastern Academy, an inner-city high school serving the needs of a large number of black youth in the New England area, heads the list.

American Indians will benefit from an outpatient clinic at the Monument Valley Hospital in Utah, and equipment for the Tine Ridge Indian School's vocational arts building in South Dakota.

And in Canada, Adventists in Quebec hope to start a French-speaking high school in Montreal from the money given by the almost 500,000 Sabbath school members in North America.

A student missionary program has been successful in recent years where young people take a year out from formal college education to give their time in an overseas mission field.

Several young people from this area have been involved during recent years, and two are in the process of going and returning.

Debbie Baerg, daughter of Pastor Lynn Baerg and Mrs. Baerg, leaves for Indonesia this month, and Janice Brousson, daughter of Charles and June Brousson of Victoria, will return in July from Japan, where she has been teaching English at Daina High School in Hiroshima.

Mormons name new bishop

More and more people are realizing there is a spiritual side to their personality and are turning back to religion after a falloff in the 1960s and early 1970s.

That's one aspect of his new calling which presents exciting challenges for Bishop Victor Batchelor, 1461 Ocean View, who was recently called as bishop of the Victoria 2nd Ward of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints (Mormon).

The resurgence of religion in people's lives has seen the Mormon church growing rapidly—something it did even when other faiths were struggling to fill their pews.

Batchelor, a 31-year-old father of three young boys, joined the church almost three years ago and was baptized with his wife Germaine.

He said he was attracted to the Mormon faith by its emphasis on family and family unity, self development, and good health laws.

Batchelor also enjoys the "totality of lifestyle" offered by the church and says "it's not something you pay tribute to once in a while, you really live it every minute."

As bishop in control of a ward (diocese) of 425 people he will be responsible for the spiritual and temporal welfare of his congregation, yet, as is the norm in the Mormon church, he will not be paid a cent for his efforts.

All leadership positions are lay positions and Batchelor will continue in his vocation as personnel director of the Glendale Lodge Society.

One of his goals is to give church members and nonmembers alike a chance to set values and standards in their lives through the teachings of the Latter-day Saints and opportunities to gain knowledge of Jesus Christ and the plan of salvation.

Batchelor said those who were struggling in their lives to find spiritual upliftment should try the Mormon church to see if it has the answers for them.

Asked his feeling on being called as a bishop, he replied: "My most immediate reaction was an incredible sense of thankfulness for the trust Jesus Christ has in me. I am overwhelmed by the thought that he has trust and faith in me."

Batchelor takes over from Bishop Earl Smith, who led the ward for the past 2½ years, and has retained the same counsellors—Lyndon Helm of 1960 Cromwell and Ray Dykes of 3007 Quadra.

Summer service joint operation

The second in the summer series of 13 gospel services in Beacon Hill Park will be held at Cameron Bandshell on Sunday at 7 p.m.

It will be a joint operation by the Friendship Baptist Church of the Gordon Head Community Centre under Pastor Ernie Kratofil, and the Gosworth Road Community Church under Pastor Charles McKnight.

The theme of the service will be Joy to be discussed in turn by the two pastors and John Olson, interning pastor at the Gosworth Road Church. McKnight will be master of ceremonies, Olson will be song leader and pianist will be Connie Kratofil.

The program will include testimonies by Rob and Diane Tyler and Marion Schmidt; a recitation of scripture (Phil. 2:1-11) by Denaline Silverwood; a skit by youth on The Wall; and a children's story.

The musical portion will feature flutisits Jim and Judy Leside and a vocal quartet comprising the two pastors and their wives.

Grace church pastor Lutheran delegate

Rev. Ronald C. Nelson, pastor of Grace Lutheran Church, will be an official delegate to the 10th biennial convention of the Lutheran Church in America in Seattle June 25-July 2.

Nearly 700 delegates from the United States, Canada and the Caribbean will meet in the Seattle Centre for a convention on the theme Confessing Christ Today, marking the 450th anniversary of the Augsburg Confession, a document from the times of the Reformation which stands to this day as a basic element in Lutherism.

Major issues facing the LCA body include the election of a secretary, a vote on a proposed Statement on Economic Justice: Stewardship of Creation in Human Community, fiscal proposls for 1981-82, recommendations from a study of the ordained ministry, and a report regarding possibilities for greater Lutheran unity in North America. In addition the work of the various agencies of the LCA will be given careful review.

Julie Nelson will attend Convo '80, an international gathering of youth of the Lutheran Church in America, held concurrently with the adult convention.

St. Helens ash sold in Alberta

EDMONTON (CP) — The eruption of Mt. St. Helen's, destructive and deadly for people in the state of Washington, could mean money in the bank for an Edmonton charity.

Larry Irvine brought back 1,000 lbs. of volcanic ash from Moses Lake, Wash. two weeks ago.

He said Wednesday he intends to sell samples and contribute all the proceeds to the Kiwanis Club. Irvine, a city surveyor, said he sells vials full of ash to stores for $1 each. Most of the stores resell them for $2.

Drought worst since 30s

REGINA (CP) — As if a drought that some say is the worst since the 1930s wasn't enough, Saskatchewan farmers have also been hit with frost, flea beetles and a heavy grasshopper infestation.

Willis Wilkie, who farms about 40 kilometres northwest of Regina, believes 1980 so far has been the driest year since 1937, the worst year in Saskatchewan crop history when provincial grain crops averaged about 2.6 bushels an acre.

Dan Schmeiser, a Saskatchewan Wheat Pool analyst, says a lot of re-seeding had occurred due to drought, frost, wind and flea beetle damage. Much of the reseeding has been done in the hard-hit central area around Yorkton and Melville which has already reported deteriorating crops from lack of moisture.

Drought hits duck breeding

EDMONTON (CP) — The dry spring that helped cause ruinous forest fires in Alberta now is threatening the duck population.

A survey done in May showed breeding ponds were drier than usual, Gordon Kerr, assistant deputy minister of fish and wildlife in the provincial department of energy and natural resources, said Thursday.

Hutterites hit by tornado

STEINBACH, Man. (CP) — A tornado touched down at the Richland Hutterite Colony, overturning farm equipment and killing one cow.

Trees were uprooted, and hydro service was interupted for eight hours. However, there were no injuries.

The Steinbach area colony is about 35 kilometres east of Winnipeg.

First ever senior's games

EDMONTON (CP) — Alberta seniors will compete in 16 different sports this summer in what could be the world's first Seniors Games, says John Gattens, vice-president of Alberta Seniors Sports and Recreation.

He said the Alberta Seniors Games, sponsored as part of the Alberta government's 75th anniversary, are "definitely a first in Canada . . .maybe a first in the world."

Gattens, long-time amateur sports organizer in Edmonton, is helping plan the games which will have seniors compete in such sports as horseshoes, croquet and carpet bowling, as well as more leisurely activities like darts and handicrafts.

Gatten expects 10,000 participants from across the province.

Police charge dismissed

EDMONTON (CP) — A charge of neglect of duty laid against a city police department sergeant after an incident last March has been dismissed after a disciplinary hearing.

The sergeant, whose name was not released, was charged with failing to review the case of a 15-year-old girl who was strip-searched and placed in a cell after being arrested for jaywalking.

"The dismissal . . . does not exonerate the police department from blame in the improper search of the girl," Police Chief R. F. Lunney said today. "The disposition of this complaint remains sustained and the apology to the girl's mother is no less sincere or appropriate."

Gas, alcohol soon to mix

WINNIPEG (UPC) — Manitoba motorists by the end of this year should have a chance to drive their cars powered by the "gasohol" combination of gasoline blended with alcohol distilled from locally grown grain.

Mohawk Oil Co. Ltd. of Calgary Thursday announced plans to produce and market the product in the province, using a former liquor distillery to obtain alcohol from grain at Minnedosa, 240 kilometres west of here.

Mohawk has signed a purchase option for the facility owned by Toronto's Gooderham and Worts Ltd.

Company president Donald Skagen said the innovative fuel — 90 per cent unleaded gasoline and 10 per cent anhydrous ethyl alcohol — would retail at 12 provincial outlets owned by the company for the same price as regular gasoline by the end of year.

AN IMPORTANT NOTICE ABOUT CHANGES IN RENT CONTROLS.

New rent increase limits are now in effect. Other changes have been announced but require legislative approval before taking effect.

THE BASIC RULES:

Although there are some exceptions, rent controls basically apply to the following units (provided that they were first rented prior to January 1, 1974.)

- One bedroom units that rent for $300 per month or less.
- Two bedroom units that rent for $350 per month or less.
- Three bedroom units that rent for $400 per month or less.

Tenants in most units renting for less than $500 per month are eligible on an individual basis for a review of an excessive rent increase.

THE CHANGES:

1. It used to be that rents could not be increased by more than 7% in one year. That rate has now been changed to 10% to reflect the current rate of inflation.

2. If you've already received notice of a 7% increase, and you're already paying that higher rent, it can't be increased again for 12 months. If, however, you have a 7% notice that isn't yet in effect, your landlord can withdraw it and can give you a new notice for 10%. He can't just add 3% on to the 7% notice. And he still has to give you a full three months notice. So the earliest the 10% could take effect would be Sept. 1.

3. As before, a landlord can give additional rent increases if he's spent money on major improvements to your unit or building. The allowable annual increase has been changed from 12% to 18% of the cost of the improvement. He still, however, has to have spent enough money to equal more than 3 months rent. And he still has to give you a full 3 months notice.

REMEMBER THAT ALL RENT INCREASES MUST BE GIVEN IN THE PROPER FORM, AND THAT 3 MONTHS NOTICE IS REQUIRED.

Other changes are also being proposed, and they'll be announced as soon as they're made legal by changes in the Residential Tenancy Act. These include provisions for tenants to appeal for a review of excessive rent increases taking effect on or after Jan. 1, 1980 on units that were first rented after Jan. 1, 1974.

The Provincial Rentalsman advises anyone who has a rental problem to try to resolve it by talking things over with their landlord or tenant before calling the Office of the Rentalsman. It can save you valuable time and ensure a better, ongoing relationship. All information and "Notice of Rent Increase" forms are available by writing or calling:

Diefenbaker Centre opened

Carolyn Weir, U of S president R.W.Begg and Emmett Hall at centre opening

SASKATOON, Sask. (CP) — Historians can be grateful for one of former prime minister John Diefenbaker's traits.

"He certainly was a pack rat," former Supreme Court justice Emmett Hall said Thursday. "Apparently he saved everything."

Many of the several million pieces of paper and thousands of pieces of memorabilia which Diefenbaker saved during his lifetime were in the John G. Diefenbaker Centre when it was officially opened Thursday.

"It's going to bring together a mass of documents and documentation that students of the political scene in Canada will have access to," said the 81-year-old Hall, an old Diefenbaker associate.

"It is important to underline that the Centre's museum is not to be of the Hall of Fame variety.

"Mr. Diefenbaker's life and career provide excellent vehicles into a broader examination of issues and events."

The Diefenbaker Centre is located on a hill overlooking the South Saskatchewan River on the University of Saskatchewan campus, where Diefenbaker and Hall studied law together more than half a century ago.

The graves of Diefenbaker and his wife are located at one end of the building, between it and the river.

Although the centre has copies of many of Diefenbaker's political speeches, Hall said there is a need to have the manuscripts supplemented with film.

"It is apparent readily that the huge Diefenbaker speech collection is of limited value without its audio and video components.

"Mr. Diefenbaker was the last of a particular oratorical age in Canadian politics.

"Often, his meanings rested on gestures, phrases, buzz words; his prepared text (was) usually abandoned in some part; and literal transcription of his speeches (is) usually, in some part, rather incoherent."

Blakeney said Diefenbaker transformed the nature of Canadian politics in the 20th Century.

"His name, his one-Canada theme, opened the doors of political life to people of all ethnic origins who may have felt subtly shut out by the traditions of the British and French political establishments."

He said Diefenbaker was able to stir the imagination and quicken the pulse with his populist appeal, an appeal he said was especially felt in Saskatchewan.

"He was our first citizen, our favorite son, the only prime minister whose roots were in Saskatchewan. In many ways, he became our legend."

VICTORIA CITY TAXPAYERS

Real property tax statements have now been mailed. If you have not received your 1980 statement, please contact City Hall at 385-5711, Local 251. Taxes must be received in the Collector's Office by 4:30 p.m. on the due date of June 30th, 1980, regardless of the date payment is mailed. Cheques post-dated to June 30th, 1980, will be accepted in advance. All unpaid 1980 taxes (including unclaimed Home Owners Grants) are subject to:

PENALTY OF 4 PER CENT TO BE ADDED

AT THE CLOSE OF BUSINESS ON JULY 2, 1980.

Taxpayers should note that the second penalty will be 6 per cent to be added at the close of business on Sept. 29, 1980.
Eligible taxpayers are urged to apply for their Home Owner Grants as soon as they receive their statement. It is not necessary to make a payment in order to claim the Grant.

MUNICIPAL COLLECTOR,
CITY OF VICTORIA.

Grain embargo has farmers in penny pinch

By CAROL GOAR
FP News Service

OTTAWA — Jack Murta is a farmer, a member of Parliament and, by his own estimation, a pretty patriotic Canadian.

But on weekends, when he gets home and gazes over the wheatfields of his Manitoba farm, he can't supress a trace of resentment about the $30,000 that's missing from his balance sheet this year because of Canada's embargo on Russian grain sales.

"It's like watching your profits go down the drain," the 37-year-old Conservative told FP News Service in an interview Thursday.

Murta's 3,000-acre farm outside Winnipeg is larger than average. A more typical prairie farmer would be looking at a $10,000-bite in his income.

In theory, the money is not really gone.

The government, acknowledging that it would be unfair to penalize farmers for a political act, has promised to reimburse them for losses arising out of the Jan. 4 grain embargo. But this has done little to alleviate the sense of foreboding which grips the farm community.

With the end of the bookkeeping year for crops just 48 days away, farmers still have no idea when they'll get their cheques, how the government will calculate their losses, or how long the embargo will go on.

"The embargo has been in effect for five months, surely the government has had time to figure out some of the costs," says Charles Mayer, Tory MP for the Manitoba riding of Portage-Marquette. "It could at least come up with some way of ensuring farmers that they will not be stuck with the full price tag for Canada's foreign policy."

The two young western MPs, one a farmer and one a cattleman, are leading fellow western Conservatives in a House of Commons blitz to push the Liberal government into making a firm dollar commitment to farmers soon.

But both admit they are tackling an emotionally sensitive and technically difficult issue.

One huge problem is putting a price-tag on the lost sales. Mayer's best estimate is that the embargo — which froze Soviet wheat exports at what the government defined as "traditional levels" — has caused a 75-cent-a-bushel drop in the price of wheat.

But he admits that is only an estimate. He got it by comparing the Chicago price of wheat now to its selling price prior to the embargo. The difference was 60 cents U.S. or 75 cents Canadian.

To come up with an accurate figure, a person would have to somehow sift out all the extraneous factors which influence wheat prices — the weather, market conditions around the world, currency exchange rates and a host of others. Mayer admits privately the figure could be anywhere from 40 cents to $1.

A second major difficulty is that the whole topic of the five-month-old embargo has become confused and charged with emotion.

Murta, who is just home from an inter-parliamentary meeting of Canadian MPs and American senators in San Diego, told the group "the feeling in western Canada can best be summed up: 'To hell with the embargo. We want to sell grain.'"

Although he was a firm supporter of former prime minister Joe Clark's decision to join the U.S. in limiting Russian grain exports following the invasion of Afghanistan, he has serious doubts about the effectiveness of the embargo now.

"It's doing more harm to farmers than the good it's accomplishing on the foreign policy side."

For one thing, Argentina, a large grain exporter, never joined the embargo. It has increased its Soviet wheat sales drastically, making up for some of the lost North American supplies.

There is also evidence that American farmers, while technically going along with the embargo, are finding back-door ways to keep their grain sales at record levels. Ted Turner, president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, has suggested that the U.S. is getting around the embargo by selling wheat to Soviet satellites, such as Yugoslavia, and closing its eyes to the fact that the grain eventually ends up in Moscow.

Careful checks, however, indicate that the Americans are using rather more sophisticated tactics. While appearing to obey the embargo, they are busy canvassing Argentina's former customers while Argentina sells most of its wheat to Russia.

"So here's Canada going by the letter of the law and not pushing sales," Murta says with some bitterness, "We're suffering and we'll continue to suffer until the government decides what to do."

That is a farmer's assessment. His political forecast is more cynical.

Murta guesses the Canadian government won't do anything to jeopardize the embargo until the U.S. election is over in November.

"I'd like to see the U.S. administration gently told that we're losing more than we're benefiting and Canada is going to slide slowly out of the embargo.

"But it won't happen. Not till next year, at least."

If he is right, the announcement Wheat Board Minister Hazen Argue has promised to make next month about the fate of the embargo will be rather anti-climatic.

The matter is now being discussed in cabinet. The current embargo expires at the end of the bookkeeping year for crops, July 31.

Meanwhile, the price of wheat is hovering between $4.80 and $5 a bushel, compared with $5.50-to-$5.75 a year ago.

Water is in desperately short supply. Harvesting, with all its worries, begins next month and it looks as if there are going to be empty grain-cars and unused elevator space on the prairies for the first time in years.

More and more angry rumbles are being heard from farm groups — the wheat pools, the co-ops and farmers themselves.

In his Monday-to-Friday Ottawa job, dressed in his grey business suit and sitting stiffly in the Commons, Jack Murta, the Tory MP, is trapped. How can he denounce the embargo when it was his party which implemented it in the first place? How can he urge its end, when his own leader, Joe Clark, continually urges the government to support the U.S. in all its efforts to bring the Soviet Union to heel?

Out on the farm, life is harsher and simpler. A rich customer has been told his rubles aren't welcome. That makes it harder to make a good living.

TV signals from U.S. a threat?

JOHNSON . . .
funding needed

MONTREAL (CP) — Canadian culture could be endangered by new communications systems enabling viewers to vastly increase their choice of television shows, says Al Johnson, president of the CBC.

Pay television and the expanding use of earth receiving stations to pick up television signals from satellites could swamp Canadians with such a quantity of programs produced in the United States that programming produced in Canada would suffer, Johnson said Friday.

"Because 75 per cent of Canadians share the same language as our neighbor to the south and because we indeed share with our American cousins much of the same taste in programming, there is a danger that our broadcasting industry will simply import all the new services from the U.S. and that Canadian programs will be swamped in the process," he said.

The 56-year-old Johnson, who has a doctorate from Harvard, made the comments in a well-received speech before about 800 mostly-American delegates at a convention of the Broadcasters Promotion Association.

Johnson told reporters after his speech that more money is needed for producing Canadian-made programs that can compete with those made in the U.S.

"Canadian actors, producers and directors are being asked to produce shows at half the price of those done in the U.S.," he said.

He said Canadian viewers could be "tempted" by the large variety of shows available through satellite transmissions relayed from the U.S. — including what are known as vertical-programming stations which provide a full-time service geared to particular audiences such as children.

Quebecers see Queen 'divisive'

TORONTO (CP) — English-speaking Canadians must recognize that keeping the Queen as head of state is considered divisive by Quebec, a Liberal member of Quebec's National Assembly said Friday.

Reed Scowen, former executive director of the Pepin-Robarts report on national unity, told the graduating class of the Toronto French School that Quebec wants a new, unifying head of state.

Scowen said symbols of change are as important as change itself.

His remarks reflect the Quebec Liberal party position as outlined in Claude Ryan's beige paper. The position has added credibility after the victory of the no forces in the recent Quebec referendum on sovereignty-association, he said.

Scowen said Prime Minister Trudeau and his government are mistaken to believe the referendum's defeat is a rejection of Quebec independence.

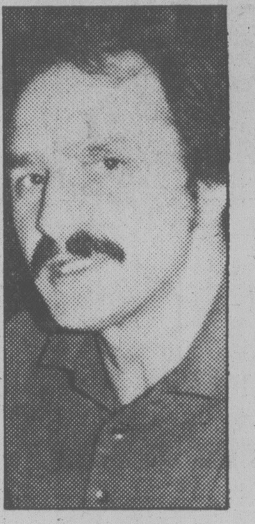
By LON WOOD

Harold Kazakoff spins hundreds of records at WCRS just north of Noonan, North Dakota, at Estevan, Sask.

WCRS? He runs it himself — but it's no 50-watt rural Midwestern radio station. Those are the call letters of Western Canada Record Search.

Kazakoff deals in nostalgia — out-of-print records. He'll try his best to find a copy of whatever turned you on way back when — even if you think chances of locating one are slim.

"I've had people come up to me at parties, hum a few bars of a song . . .," says Kazakoff. "They expect me to be able to find the record — and I often do."



Kazakoff

"Most people are simply concerned with getting a record, but the serious collector may ask for specific date of issue or even a particular color of vinyl. One individual wanted a record that had the RCA Victor dog on the left rather than the right-hand side."

Kazakoff, here to prowl used record outlets, says people pay an average of $15 for "finds" but that in some circles prices up to $1,000 are paid — like for original Presley releases.

Western Canada Record Search began quite by accident a few years ago.

Kazakoff, charge engineer with Saskatchewan Power Corporation's Boundary Dam Power Station, once tried to replace some of his favorite fifties folk records but music stores wouldn't order the records he wanted. So he wrote a few letters to U.S. distributors.

"I was bombarded with replies," he said. "With every letter, response mushroomed until I got all those records."

Soon he had contacts among some 5,000 record dealers, enabling him to help others locate hard-to-get records — and to add to his own collection, now numbering nearly 900 discs.

"It isn't just a case of dropping one letter in the mail and sitting back," says Kazakoff. "I've written more than 40 letters to distributors just to fill a single record request."

Kazakoff's mail-order hobby takes up some 25 hours of his time a week — while the rest of his off-work time is spent with his wife Kathy and their children Bob, 5, and Stacey, 7.

"I view this venture as more of a hobby than a business," he says. "There is really very little money to be made when you add up distributor's price, duty and mailing costs — I make between a buck and a buck-fifty per album."

To those who want their favorites to last, Kazakoff says take care of today's records.

"Otherwise you'll be coming to me when you're 40 looking for the Bee Gees," he says.

Most albums Kazakoff locates are second hand, but even older ones that have been cared for can be in perfect shape. He tapes everything as soon as it arrives and steers away from promotional or disc-jockey copies because they're often over-used and in rough shape.

He also prefers buying U.S. pressings of a particular record, since the quality of U.S. vinyl is superior to recycled material used by Canadian manufacturers.

Despite his obsession with music, Kazakoff describes himself as non-musical.

"I'm struggling with the guitar, but I'm terrible at it," he admits sheepishly.

WCRS is run out of the Kazakoff home at 1841 Alice Road, Estevan, Sask., S4A 1G7.

Most clients appreciate Kazakoff's hard work — but there are exceptions. One woman contacted him upon her return from holidays. She had heard a song in a cafe in Portugal. She didn't know the name of the group. He spent months searching for the record and finally found it.

"I was so excited — but when I told her the record would cost around $20, she decided she didn't want it.

About three times a month he threatens to quit.

"But I never do. I guess I just get a lot of personal satisfaction out of helping people."

'A Will and a way'

By AUDREY JOHNSON

The man who is going to guide the artistic policies of the Globe Theatre — when and if it comes into being — is confident that Victoria is ready for a Shakespeare festival.

Barry Morse maintains that in the world of entertainment and recreation, Shakespeare is the greatest money-maker of them all.

"If I put it to a Hollywood executive or an entrepreneur — 'what has been the biggest money maker in entertainment history?' — they'll come up with movie titles and things like Barnum and Bailey.

"And then I tell them the man who has been packing them in all over the world for 400 years is Will Shakespeare; and they are astounded."

Morse has a quality of enthusiasm that seems always to be on simmer and increases to white hot when sharing his conviction that if there's a Will there's a way to bring Shakespeare and the Globe to Victoria.

And he never cools off at the introduction of any subject dealing with his profession.

British born, 62 year old Barry Morse began the pursuit of his serious theatrical ambitions as a student at London's Royal Academy of Dramatic Art. He was there at the same time as Victoria's well known arts personality, Betty Mayne and popular Vancouver actor Sam Payne. He remembers them both vividly as students and was delighted to encounter Betty again when he came to Victoria.

A lot of Morse's work in recent years has been concerned with radio, TV and film. Currently he is under contract with Interlock Productions of Vancouver to make a film entitled Interlock. It is the first Vancouver made feature length film to seek its financing through a public offering directed at Western Canadian investors.

"Up to now" says Morse, "Canadian films worldwide, have been judged second-rate — except for National Film Board output. And certainly they've rarely returned a profit.

"But I like to think it's finally getting a bit better," he says, "with competent technicians and cameramen who show initiative backed by expertise."

Barry has been in Canada for 30 years and a Canadian citizen for 25. He and his actress wife live in Toronto when they are not in their small flat in London while either or both are working there.

"But I always say home is where my little black bag is, and that, I hope, may well be on the west coast in the future."

In connection with films for movies and television, he says more writers of quality must develop script talents. "Good writers are basic to the process."

All that has gone before in the way of radio and other theatre entertainment has contributed to the best we have today, he says.

"It's been an on-going development. The great CBC radio drama of the 40s contributed to Stratford — although mysteriously not to television — and all theatre enterprise has contributed to present film making."

Canadian film makers need to think more often in terms of a good straightforward audience pleaser, Barry feels. But it must be well made. "Nothing sells better than quality."

That's why he has good feelings about Interlock. The script, co-authored by Stephen Miller and director Tom Braidwood, is both tightly written and taut with dramatic incident, he notes. It is in a current genre, a futuristic thriller concerning a computer physics student turned new-age terrorist.

As for producers Floyd Sully and Kirk Tougas and co-author-director Braidwood, all three UBC grads bring enormous expertise and sophistication to the enterprise.

Morse also finds particular satisfaction in the "coming back to the roots" aspect that will see the UBC as principal site for filming of Interlock.

Does he think B.C. investors will go for the chance to own a piece of the action?

"Why not? The project has a lot going for it in terms of personnel, already arranged international promotion, script and a reasonable production budget — and it certainly qualifies as a tax shelter with more than the obligatory six units provenly Canadian. Only one lead player is being sought in the United States."

He points out that for a Canadian investor the gamble is not that big. In the event of there being no profits, their investment becomes a complete tax write-off.

"Everything's a gamble, but it's particularly tricky to project success for a theatrical property. One can only get all the pluses together, try to look at every angle, strive for quality by choosing the best attainable."

Like Shakespeare, I suggest.

"Exactly! As we are determined to do for the Globe Theatre project."

But a far-away look comes into his eye. Did I know that Agatha Christie's Mousetrap began life as a radio play?

"BBC was planning a special program for Queen Mary's birthday and when she was asked what she would like included, she mentioned that if there was something of Agatha Christie's, she would enjoy that.

"Well, Christie had a little script called Three Blind Mice, so it was cast — I was in it playing the police inspector. I was in theatrical management at the time and a colleague suggested that I could probably buy the rights to the piece for no more than 100 pounds. But I said the play was too slight to interest me.

"A couple of years later I was in London and went to see the thriller that was drawing crowds to the West End, The Mousetrap. I no sooner glanced at the program than I realized it was the 'slight' play I had turned down, with Richard Attenborough in my role.

"As you know it's run for 28 years and made fortunes. So much for foresight."

Morse heaves a philosophical sigh but he's not a man to waste time on hindsight regrets. His blue eyes sparkle with the light of new enterprise.

"About the Globe," he says; "I shall be in the neighborhood all summer now for the shooting of Interlock, so I'll be able to keep an eye on developments ... it's going to be tremendous!"

BARRY MORSE and his wife Sydney Sturggess kibbitz over a script in the game he calls "this acting lark." In his 40-year career Morse is probably best known to many in Victoria's television audience as the detective in the widely-telecast The Fugitive series.

Dour Dustin, grouch Marlon bite hand . . .

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Next time you see Marlon Brando, don't ask for his autograph.

When approached by an eager fan with a pen and paper in a Los Angeles restaurant recently, Brando growled:

"I don't get involved with such foolishness. It's a game for children, and you're an adult."

And in another flash of the cranky side of stardom, writer Joseph Heller may have to change his plans for the filming of his latest book.

The author of Catch-22 was giving a lecture in England when someone asked if his new novel, Good As Gold, would be made into a movie.

"It would be a very good vehicle for Dustin Hoffman," replied Heller, whereupon Hoffman, who happened to be in the audience, jumped up, shouted:

"I would never play the lead in that," and stomped out.

For weeks the European press has been speculating about the health of surrealist Salvador Dali, 76. So when he checked into an exclusive health clinic near the Mediterranean resort of Marbella recently, rumors flew suggesting heart attacks and mental breakdowns. Word is, however, that the eccentric Spaniard has gone into hiding over a terrible personal mishap — he accidently snipped off part of the flamboyant moustache he has sported for 50 years.

A 39-day fast by Toronto musician and artist Mendelson Joe to protest against nuclear energy has brought him lots of verbal support but little of substance. Joe, who has lost 36 pounds, says only a major nuclear accident will bring Ontario's anti-nuclear movement to life.

Dolly Parton made her first appearance in four years at the annual Country Music Fan Fair in Nashville, Tenn., and police were needed to get her through a mob of 1,000 fans for a 45-minute autograph session. Parton, who switched her management and home from Nashville to Los Angeles, said she is happy to be spending the summer in in Nashville writing and recording. She will work on the soundtrack to her first film, Nine to Five, also starring Jane Fonda and Lily Tomlin.

"It was just time to come home," Parton said.

They handed over $23 and Fred Astaire, 81, and Robyn Smith, 35, walked away with a marriage licence.

The hoofer and the jockey took out the license in Santa Monica. No wedding date was announced but the couple said it would take place soon.

Royalties from the hit song Too Much Heaven were donated to UNICEF last year by the Bee Gees. Barry, Robin and Maurice Gibb first performed the hit at a United Nations concert and a souvenir album of the concert by the Bee Gees and other popular performers has raised about $3 million. The song is expected to earn about $500,000 for the world's neediest children.

John (Johnny C) Conaghan was sentenced to 18 months in prison for being a supplier of cocaine and Quaaludes to patrons of New York's Studio 54 disco.

Blue Champagne launches Mac fiesta

Summer at the McPherson Playhouse is to be an eight-week long fiesta complete with champagne — the 'Blue' variety served up by revue artists Bill Cole, Jayne Lewis and Deirdre Van Winkle — and caviar — the imported kind offered by the Victoria International Festival's 21 concerts.

In between are all sorts of savors: the hearty taste of Newfoundland's new band, Figgy Duff, which will give one concert on July 13; the crisp, bright sizzle of The Nylons, performing July 16-19; and the spice of the British comedy, Shut Your Eyes and Think of England.

Blue Champagne rings up the curtain on this non-stop entertainment, performing from June 30 to July 12. It's a lively but nostalgic recall of the music of the 40s and it's been steadily scoring hits from the time it opened in Toronto and its month-long run at the Sadye Bronfman Centre in Montreal and throughout its 15-city tour across the country.

It uses the format of a vintage radio broadcast, zipping through a potpourri of more than 60 song hits from the 1940s as it conjurs up memories of big bands, the Andrews Sisters, Carmen Miranda and others.

Anton Gosley takes over this year to produce Victoria's summertime Smile Show which opens at the Empress on July 4

audrey johnson

Persistant rumors that there would be no Smile Show this summer because Jerry Gosley has retired, can be set at rest now.

Thursday was the first day of rehearsal for this summer's show which is being produced by Anton Gosley with Michael Farr as production manager.

There will be a three-week rehearsal period for the new company which Michael describes as one of the best ever. It includes Paul Liittich, one of this city's most talented performers, and newcomer Patrick Hughes, a talented Irish singer-entertainer.

Others in the company are Lori Charters, Judy Buchan, Mary Monks, Deryck Hazel and David Kirk.

Besides all this, while Jerry has retired in his performing capacity, his heart is still in the show and he is assisting in every way possible. A son taking over the decision-making from a father who was the founder and focus of the show for 30 years, could very easily promote a tricky situation, but it's working just fine, reports Michael.

The two communicate well, with Jerry being entirely sensitive to the problems inherent when two creative minds are concentrating on the same object.

The Smile Show opens at the Empress Hotel July 4. It's still a big question mark as to whether Jerry will at any point, make a guest appearance.

If he knows, Michael isn't saying.

Officials of Bastion Theatre are heartened over the response to date to the $25,000 challenge issued by the anonymous 'prominent local businessman'. At this point they are only $6,975 away from that magic total in matching donations from the community.

There is still two weeks to go before the June 30 cutoff date so everyone is feeling quite optimistic about the success of the challenge.

Board president Clare Copeland says people of all ages and backgrounds have responded, but adds the caution that it is vital for anyone who has not yet participated to do so quickly in order to put the campaign-within-a-campaign over the top.

The three-year fund-raising program now in its first year, has to date totaled $81,472 in cash and pledges. The special contributions should be marked 'Challenge Donation'.

The three plays that will occupy the Phoenix Theatre stage on University of Victoria campus this summer have been carefully chosen to appeal to all tastes and temperaments.

The program offers a play about family relationships in Michel Tremblay's Bonjour, la Bonjour; a comedy, Vanities, by Jack Heifner, and a mature ironic drama in Carol Bolt's Gabe. Tremblay and Bolt are Canadian playwrighs.

The box office is now open Monday to Saturday from 12 noon to 4 p.m. The number is 477-4821 for ticket reservations and detailed information concerning the performance schedule which will run from June 25 through Aug.2.

Possibly the newest festival to emerge on the Canadian scene makes its debut in Newfoundland this summer. It will be known as The Stephenville Festival of the Arts, and its artistic director is outstanding Canadian actor Maxim Mazumdar.

Mazumdar will be remembered in Victoria by the many who saw him during his two visits to The Belfry in his brilliant one-man show, Oscar Remembered, a poignant recollection of Oscar Wilde.

The small festival which last two weeks, from July 15 to Aug.2, affords Mazumdar a chance to play the role he once confessed was his particular dream: he will be playing Hamlet in Shakespeare's tragedy directed by Thom Sokolowski. The other three offerings are the perennial favorite Thornton Wilder, Our Town, the equally perennial favorite Jacques Brel, and a world premiere of a new Mazumdar piece, Invitation to the Dance, being a play based on the life and world of a great ballet star.

If you're heading for the Maritimes this summer, Stephenville is not far from Corner Brook and sounds like being worth a visit. The natural scenery as well as the stage scenery, we hear, is delightful.

Neon Nights brighten CBC format

rock 'n' roll

By ISAAC WILLIAMS

Rock 'n' roll on CBC radio? Not too likely, you say? Can't blame you for being skeptical. The CBC radio network has always represented a colossal waste of money. Its overall musical format seems to consist of nonstop classical and background muzak that, according to record sales, appeals to about two per cent of the population.

Compared to Britain's BBC, which manages to present a cross section of music for every taste, the CBC's efforts are dismal.

But they do have rock and roll on CBC radio — and it is the best two hours of broadcasting on this planet.

I could type music columns until my fingers fell off and the message wouldn't be as good as if you take time to listen to CBC AM on Saturday nights at eleven. The show is called Neon Nights and its creator is J.B. Shane. He is a definite throwback to the early days of radio when the announcers entertained their listeners by making them use their imaginations. Today when all radio 'jocks' sound exactly the same — but Shane shines. How that bastion of mediocrity, was talked into giving him air time is a mystery — but it is the best thing the CBC has ever presented for rock idiom idiots like me. Saturday night is not exactly prime radio time, but if you love good music and want to know what is going on at home and abroad, then be ready. (It may mean dragging yourself home early from the bar but it is definitely worth the effort.)

Apart from playing the best new international music, which other stations won't touch, Shane also plays new Canadian recordings. He encourages new performers to send their demo tapes or independently promoted waxings to Neon Nights where they will be given national exposure. This aspect of the show should mark a great step forward in breaking down the regional walls that plague the Canadian music climate. A song can be a huge hit in Vancouver but never be heard in Toronto because until Shane there has never been any unifying force in Canadian music — no national musical paper of any worth, no decent television rock show and nothing useful on the radio. But Neon Nights, if enough people listen, could do for Canada what the John Peel show did for Britain. Peel's BBC rock show has broken hundreds of acts, such as Dire Straits who sent one demo song to the show and the next day were deluged with offers from every record company in England.

The Doug and the Slugs single Too Bad is a perfect example of how hard it is for a regional hit on an independent label to 'breakout' nationally. The song, thanks to imaginative marketing, a great cover and a catchy beat, has ever so slowly moved eastward topping the charts across B.C. and the prairies. Now nearly five months after its release, Too Bad is climbing up the Ontario charts. It has taken a long time and a lot of work to do what a national radio show like Neon Nights could achieve in one broadcast.

It is up to us, the fans of good music, to support the show by listening and perhaps writing a few letters of support. After all it is our taxes that makes the CBC possible and it is about time that rock and roll fans got their money's worth. It would be too bad if we let some mandarin turn off our Neon Nights.

DOUG AND THE SLUGS hit single Too Bad is a perfect example of how hard it was for a Canadian group to get national exposure — which did happen through J.B. Shane's Neon Nights.

Art Gallery of Greater Victoria a hive of artivity around the galleries

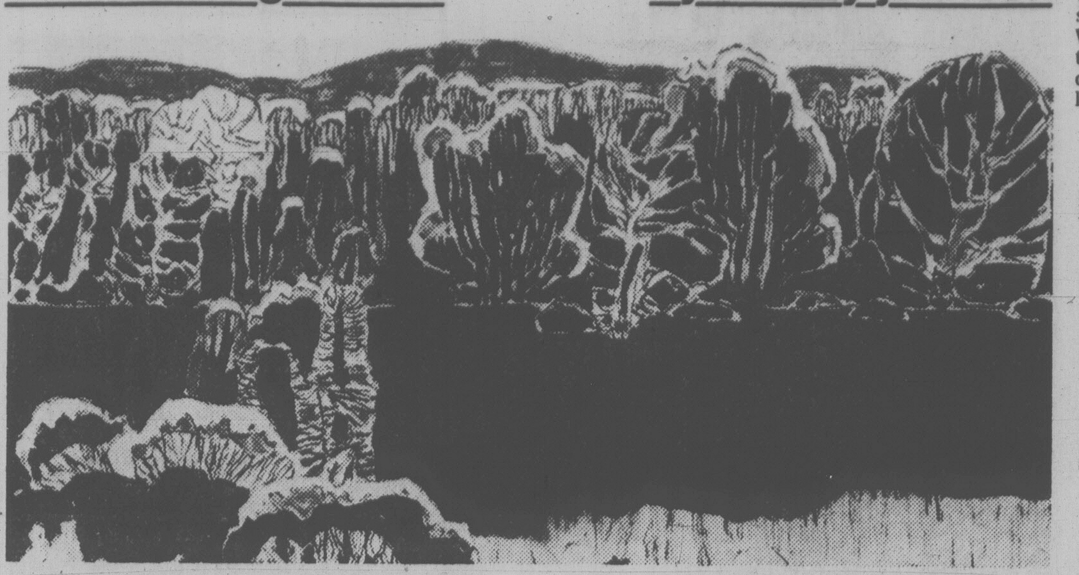
by audrey johnson



Detail from current Victoria gallery exhibit of watercolors by David Milne

There is plenty of news emanating fom the Art Gallery of Greater Victoria this week. A new president of the board has been elected to replace retiring Dr. Burton Kurth. He is Allan Rowan-Legg, a retired oil company executive and once Ontario's agent-general in the United Kingdom and Europe.

Alan Potter and Robert Wishart are secretary and treasurer and new trustees are Murray Glazier, Reginald Lane, Rosita Tovell, Patricia Maclean and Henry Elder.

Choice of the new gallery director to replace resigned Roger Boulet, has been narrowed down and the interviewing process begins shortly. But there is a new curator of contemporary art.

He is Greg Bellerby. He comes from the extension department of the Vancouver Art Gallery with a sound background in both art history and film, and video technology.

The Gallery is collaborating with the Four Seasons Musical Theatre production of the Emily Carr musical, The Wonder of it All, by arranging an exhibition of Carr works to coincide with the world stage premiere at the Newcombe Auditorium, June 27 to July 31.

Something quite new in the way of a summer program is the institution of "walking tours".They are taking place twice daily until Aug.30, starting at 10 a.m. and 1 p.m.

The tours start with a complete look at the Gallery, including the exhibitions, gardens, cafe and shop, then proceed to Government House gardens and a tour of Craigdarroch Castle. The tour returns to the Gallery and a possible stop for tea, lunch or gift shopping in the Gallery facilities. Special separate tours are available for children. Call the Gallery to book group tours.

The Gallery announces that its Vancouver Island Invitational 1980 exhibition will be devoted to printmakers. The period will be Dec. 11 to Jan. 11, 1981. Artists interested in being included are asked to submit 10 slides for consideration no later than July 30.

Currently showing at the Gallery are the watercolors of David Milne, 20 works by A.Y. Jackson, recent accessions to the oriental collections, and the environmental video-tape and slide and audio experience provided by Eric Cameron in Behind Closed Doors.

Barbara Little, who with her husband Carl, has recently opened the unique gallery and collector's paradise, Arts Connection, on Fort Street, has turned a traumatic experience into something of value from many points of view, not only to herself but to her newly adopted community.

Forced to leave her major role as Head of Festivals and Special Events for the CBC in Ottawa because of brain surgery, she was ordered to take life more quietly than her involved activity in the east would permit.

The decision was then made, once medical support facilities (the CAT-SCAN at Jubilee Hospital) were assured, to move to Victoria and embark on their dream of the small intimate gallery of art and memorabilia, its theme, the link between the performing and the visual arts.

While preparing for the move to Victoria, Barbara made the decision to write about her personal drama, including her marriage to Carl Little, who at the time was manager of the National Art Centre Orchestra.

That story has now been accepted by Readers Digest and is scheduled for publication in the widely read magazine within six months.

Meanwhile, Barbara reports Arts Connection has established a program stretching into the late fall. Included will be noted Canadian theatrical designer Brian Jackson's 'Costumes I would like to have created' (to tie in with Bastion Theatre's 10th anniversary season) and cartoonist Ben Wicks who will offer something that is surrounded by question marks — 'Born losers in music'.

Original stone lithographs and water colors by Roy and Olga Tomlinson, many of them depicting the vanishing Cariboo environment, will comprise an exhibition at the Olde Towne Gallery, 1213 Wharf, starting Sunday and continuing through June 22.

The lithographs are in a limited edition. Gallery hours are Monday through Saturday, 9 a.m. to 6 p.m.; Sundays, 1 p.m. to 4 p.m.

At the McPherson Playhouse mezzanine gallery, the excellent woodcuts of Peggy Arber which include portraits and landscapes, should not be missed by anyone interested in the art of the print-maker.

Sharing the exhibition space are two other gifted women; Rosemary James-Cross provides some arresting works in oil and gouache. She has a finely developed color sense that is basically refined yet capable of an effective boldness.

She brings a cultivated and discerning eye to bear on cityscape and suburbia, revealing fine draughtsmanship and a fluent style.

Jeanne Settle, the third exhibiter, is inspired by natural forms and responds in abstracts executed with a strong sense of rhythm and flowing line. Her work suggests both power and a passion for her subject.

The trio exhibition continues through June 27.

Students of the Victoria College of Art are exhibiting at the Maltwood Gallery in the University of Victoria Centre until June 30.

Art auction nets a bundle

TORONTO (CP) — A mid-April sale of fine decorative works of art and paintings, held here by Sotheby Parke Bernet, netted almost $545,600, the auctioneers announced recently.

Featured were rugs, carpets and wallhangings, furniture, timepieces, bronzes, ceramics, glassware, silver, Oriental works of art, and a wide selection of oil paintings, watercolors, drawings and prints.

Hawaii's innocence lost, or was it ever there?

ON THE GO with JERRY HULSE

A deserted Hawaiian beach — serene paradise or haven for roving bands of punks?

HONOLULU — Recalling the Hawaii of an early era is like thumbing through the scrapbook of one's memory and rediscovering the fragile beauty of an old flame.

Innocence. Did it ever really exist? Or was it only in the mind, a mere fantasy, a hope, a dream?

The question arises after the recent newspaper reports of violence in Hawaii.

One asks, how could violence occur in a place of such infinite beauty? Violence is expected in a tenement in New York or a Los Angeles ghetto. But on a beach in Hawaii?

Although tourism promoters are angered over negative publicity appearing in the North American press, they would do well to heed the warning. For continued crime surely would affect tourism. And without tourism the state can bid aloha to its major earning power.

Police Chief Francis Keala insists that Honolulu is safer than any other tourist-oriented city in the United States and he ticked off the names of Las Vegas, Miami, San Diego, San Francisco, Washington and New Orleans.

"I'm not saying that we don't have problems," Keala said, "but as far as the tourists are concerned they're a lot safer here than they are on the mainland."

Still, violence isn't expected in places like Hawaii — reported gang rapes on remote beaches, the senseless murder of a young intern on the Big Island, the muggings of campers by roving punks.

Even so, Keala argues that visitors will be safe if they take the same precautions in Hawaii as they do at home. He's talking about locking up valuables and avoiding isolated beaches.

"Go where there are other people," he cautions.

A girl who works in public relations in Honolulu said flat out, "I never go camping on a deserted beach in Hawaii."

And Hobe Duncan, press secretary to Gov. George Ariyoshi, responded to the question of violence by declaring, "Hawaii never has been a total paradise. There are bars on the leeward side of Oahu I wouldn't have gone to 27 years ago. There have always been certain problems. It's always been a depressed area over there."

On Maui a few weeks ago Jack Millar watched with disbelief as a gang of thieves systematically burglarized cars parked outside a fashionable new hotel on Maui, in broad daylight. With screwdrivers they popped open trunk lids, removing cameras and other valuables. Afterward they fled in a van.

Because of all the poor publicity — along with the recession — Hawaii's tourism fell sharply this year. It was down 14 percent in January, 13 percent in February and 9 percent in March.

The tourist revolution began on Oahu with the development of Waikiki. After this it spread to the neighbor islands — to Kaanapali on Maui, to Kona on the Big Island and to the beaches of Kauai. Even long somnolent Molokai — one of the last holdouts — has awakened.

Now fear persists that Hawaii could eventually perish in its own prosperity. Greedy developers — seeking the fast buck — are building abominations.

No one has forgiven one hotelman who built his high-rise to the very sidewalk of Kalakaua Avenue. Height limitations have been established on the neighbor islands: four storeys on Kauai, 10 on the Big Island and a dozen on Maui. In the high density districts of Oahu the builders can go as high as 350 feet.

As tourism grew year after year, Hawaii made the mistake of becoming complacent. Meanwhile, the mainland exported its pimps, prostitutes, thieves and panhandlers. It was our bequest to the storied islands.

Other haoles arrived to develop hotels and condominiums on the neighbor islands — on the very beaches where the locals used to swim and surf. Unfortunately, we exported a questionable style that has eroded the once sincere and friendly aloha spirit. Now money matters. And it is Hawaii's tragedy that great numbers of its youth have neither the education nor the will to work. The result is an increase in crime.

The first passenger ship dropped anchor in Hawaii in 1927. After that, for many years to follow, "boat day" was a joyous occasion. The Royal Hawaiian band played its haunting melodies. Beach boys dived for coins. The aloha spirit was as sweet as the scent of plumeria.

Even after Pan Am's first clipper plane arrived from San Francisco, boat day remained a tradition. Only after the introduction of the jet did the scene shift. A once-small caricature of an airport grew until now it is one of the biggest, most impressive in the nation.

So boat day is only a memory. The big jets arrive constantly, depositing new tourists who do discover Hawaii was created by those with soul as well as the fastbuck artists.

The old Hawaii.

Kauai is said to be the loveliest of the Hawaiian islands. It was here that Hollywood came to film "South Pacific" beside a valley choked with rainbows. The sea washes against lava and white sand beaches and the birds sing from their jungle settings, their voices carried by the soft trade winds. And while the sea is ever as blue, there's an awakening on Bloody Mary's island.

New hotels have risen from Kapaa to Poipu. Poipu has always been a special place. It was here that vacationers were drawn to the popular low-rise Waiohai Hotel facing one of Hawaii's finest beaches. Now it is gone; soon to take its place will be a 458-room, four-story resort hotel.

It was on Kauai that I was dropped by helicopter several years ago to a deserted beach, one that's as safe from violence now as it was then. The reason it is safe is because it remains all but inaccessible. The Na Pali cliffs fall sharply behind it and the sea in this particular place churns with cross tides too dangerous for boats.

I spent the night there, alone in a world unchanged through the centuries. Except for the wind and the waves and the muted thunder of the waterfall it was as silent as the stars that shone by the millions overhead.

I recall no violence the first time I visited Maui. Kaanapali Beach was deserted — without so much as a single hotel. And this was only 18 years ago.

MT. ST. HELEN
A recent natural phenomena has occurred with the sudden activity of this dormant volcano. Events such as this, in the not too distant past, have helped shape the topography of many of the vistas we enjoy so often in our travels throughout North America. Now we have the opportunity of viewing some of the effects of earth's slow changes resulting from this dramatic display of restless nature. We have a great respect for the potential power of Mt. St. Helen and therefore maintain constant communication with authorities in the vicinity, as a precaution for our travellers. As this is being written, we have a group in Yakima who are fortunate to be amongst the first in Victoria to see for themselves a fascinating result of the eruption. Having talked with a number of this group, we find our suspicion of undue media sensationalism to be well founded. They are counting this tour amongst the most significant highlights of their lives, in the safety and comfort of our deluxe highway coach. We do have other tours in the vicinity of Mt. St. Helen, most notably our Cascade Range Explorer, leaving on July 14. This is an extremely beautiful sightseeing excursion, now with the added attraction of witnessing a new natural wonder. A note of thanks to our travellers who are displaying continued faith in our proven good judgement by not cancelling south-bound tours despite exaggerated media reports.

Castleguard Caves wind under icefield

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — Only a select group of explorers will ever see some of the most unique scenery found in Banff National Park.

Only a few people, however, would be willing in the first place to put up with the discomfort necessary to enjoy the rewards of venturing into the Castleguard Caves, Canada's most extensive cave system.

The caves wind beneath the Columbia Icefield, a mountain and an alpine meadow. Despite numerous expeditions, cavers still haven't come to the end of the system, which has close to 12 kilometres of mapped passageways.

It's not the size of the network that intrigues scientists, however; it's the location.

"There's nothing like it in the world," says Derek Ford, of McMaster University's geography department in Hamilton, Ont., who is leading an expedition into the caves.

They are distinctive because of their lengthy passageways beneath glacial ice, Ford said, adding that they allow the icefield to be analysed from below as well as above.

Parks Canada has sealed off the entrance and special permission is needed to venture inside.

One of the basic reasons for the closing is protection of the natural features, since a careless move can easily break a formation that has been thousands of years in the making.

Another is to protect people.

"Castleguard is fraught with all sorts of dangers," said Peter Whyte, the warden in charge of public safety in the park. "If people were going in on a regular basis, we would be faced with real difficulties."

There has never been a serious injury in Castleguard but an accident in a cave is far more serious than one on top of a mountain, Whyte said. Park wardens have some experience at caving and could mount a rescue attempt if necessary.

Ron Seale, chief naturalist at Banff and a participant in a 1979 Castleguard expedition, said the logistics of getting someone out with even a relatively minor injury are extremely complex.

"If someone had a broken ankle only a few miles in, it would be very difficult to get him out," he said.

Seale says only 50 people have ever gone beyond the first obstacle, a nearly vertical drop of 10 metres that must be descended by a rope or portable ladder. The drop leads directly to a 100-metre passage known as the "ice-crawl."

"That's what separates serious cavers from the rest of the human race," Seale said.

People can get an idea of the experience by imagining a crawl from one end of a football stadium to the other on their stomachs with ice beneath them and almost no room to spare above their heads.

The cave's main passage runs directly into glacial ice but explorers speculate that the main system may lead to at least one and possibly a second network.

There is also speculation that the passages may wind all the way through to B.C.'s Columbia Valley, putting it in the 20-kilometre range and ranking it close to Kentucky's Mammoth Cave, the longest in North America.

Thai museum a palace

BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) — Thailand's National Museum not only houses historic treasures — it is one.

The collection is partly housed in traditional style pavilions of an old royal palace. Its ornate, sweeping roofs and its elaborate carvings vie with the museum objects themselves in beauty and interest.

Inside the old palace are Buddha images, ceramics, costumes and old weaponry from all periods of Thai history.

It also contains the venerated Phra Buddha Sihing image, which is revered at the traditional New Year's celebration of Songkran in the spring.

The museum is open daily from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. except Monday and Friday. English-speaking guides are available.

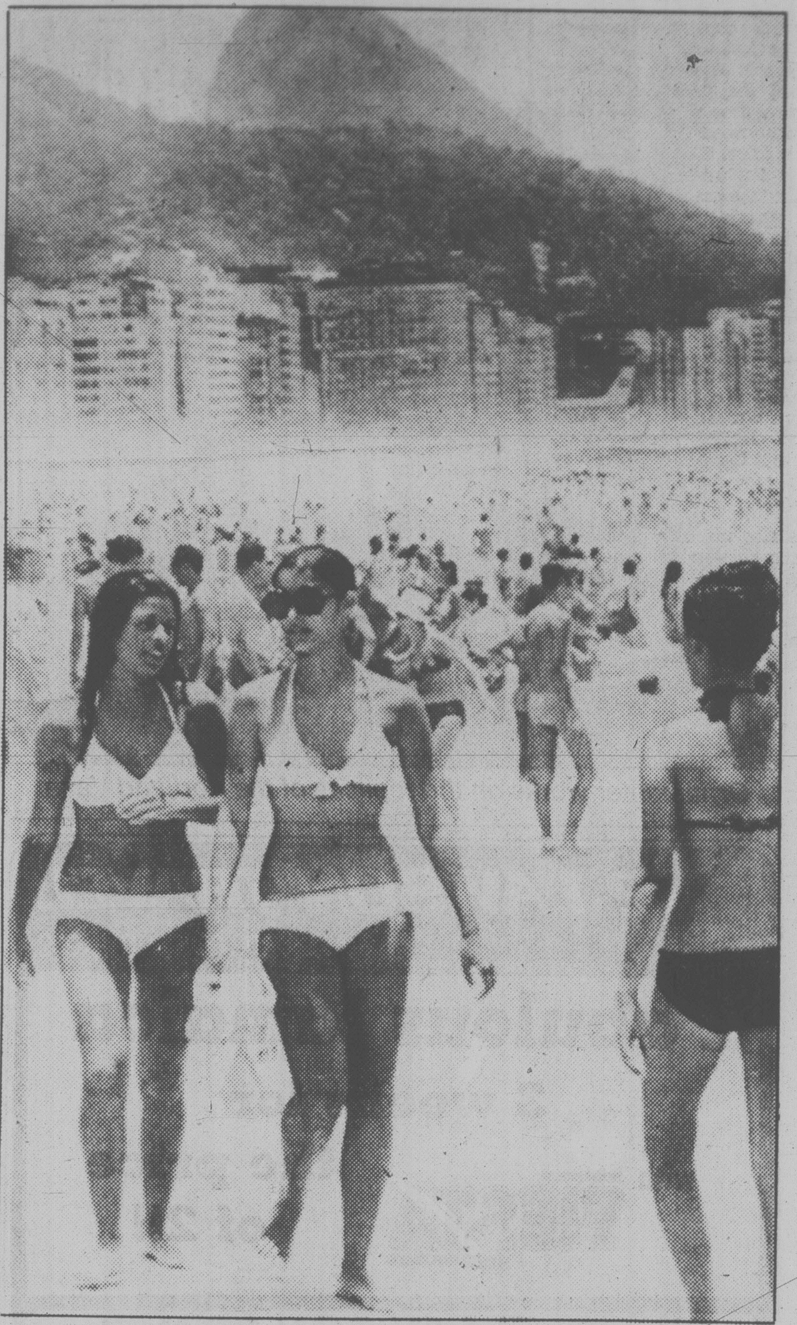
Rio has its own island Eden nearby



Girls of Ipanema go walking on beach near Rio de Janeiro

with
STAN DELAPLANE

RIO DE JANEIRO — Tall and tan and young and lovely,
The girl from Ipanema goes walking . . .

So goes the haunting bossa nova tune by the premier Brazilian composer Antonio Carlos Jobim.

Ipanema is a word that curls nicely past the tonsils. It's a class neighborhood where beachfront apartments rent for $4000 a month and many ladies go topless. But Senhor Jobim could just as easily be fantasizing about girls in tangas (string bikinis) lazing on the sands of Botafogo, Leblon, Flamengo, Gavea, especially Copacabana, with its three-mile sweep of highrises and sidewalks swirling like a samba.

Yesterday, we checked into a $100-a-night eyrie, having flown here from Los Angeles.

Half the passengers were Japanese.

We took a horse-drawn carriage, clop-clopping around Paqueta, the island Cariocas call "the garden of love." You can guess why — it's a place to get away from it all, if only for a naughty weekend with Maria Teresa from the steno pool.

Ilha de Paqueta is 20 kilometres up Guanabara Bay from Rio, and you get there by ferry from the small boat marina at Botafago, a beach at the foot of Sugar Loaf.

En route you'll putt-putt under the Rio-Niteroi bridge eight kilometres long but an esthetic disappointment.

A four-hour excursion to this bosky little Eden costs $14, and most tourists rent a bike or hire a carriage to see the two-mile-long island, for cars are banned.

Joao is the driver's name. A husky, shy black man of 50 perhaps who doesn't speak a word of English. He speaks with the slurry, sibiliant rhythms of Rio, home of Carnaval and the string bikini.

Paqueta . . . the feeling is like a village in the bayous of Louisiana.

The difference is that these islanders don't speak Cajun. They speak the Carioca dialect of Portuguese.

Unpaved streets, urchins of all shades playing in the gutters. Beaches with small boats pulled up on the sand. Modest houses (and a few elegant ones) hidden in tropical greenery. There is a salt breeze and vistas of a harbor as spectacular as Hong Kong, Sydney or San Francisco.

Rents are low, the tempo laid-back. There's even a smog-free view of the skyline of Rio in the distance. On a clear day, you can see the gigantic statue of Christ atop Corcovado.

Joao waves at the barefoot kids, bawls a Hola! to an old fellow digging in his garden, draws up the reins to let a crony clamber aboard and ride shotgun.

The guide on the bateau mouche which brought us here said three thousand people live here. I would have thought fewer than a thousand. A happy few still living in the horse and buggy age. And obviously loving it.

Greater downtown Paqueta is the harbor area - a shady minipark lined by souvenir shops.

Piers for the excursion boats. Stores and dance halls where you can sip a Brahma Chopp - that's a brand of beer, not a cow. Inexpensive hotels where lovers can go for a night of slap and tickle under the Southern Cross.

Riding back to Rio, with a fine sunset gilding the freighters in the harbor, we fell into conversation with one of the gamest old ladies we've met in years.

Viola was her name, and she was 82 years old, travelling alone and on crutches, for she is severely handicapped.

Life began late for Viola, who's from Wisconsin and spent a lifetime caring for an ailing mother. "Mother lived to be 104," said Viola, who's tiny and white-haired. "I didn't start travelling until I was 76."

Viola has enough money that she can stay at a smart hotel in Ipanema. She flew to Brazil on a package tour and was looking forward to seeing the Indians of Manaus, up on the Amazon.

Wedgwood united art, industry

Visitors will flock to an English industrial city this summer, to pay tribute to the potter described by William Gladstone, 19th century British prime minister, as "the greatest man who ever, in any age or country, applied himself to the important work of uniting art with industry."

Three exhibitions and an anniversary collection of ceramics are among the events which will celebrate the 250th anniversary of Josiah Wedgwood's birth.

British Rail has agreed to name a locomotive after him to mark the anniversary. It will run on the London-West Midlands line which passes the Wedgwood factory outside Stoke-on-Trent, 150 miles north-west of London.

The celebrations centre on Stoke, a city comprised of six towns known as the Potteries, which have been the home of the British pottery industry since the 17th century.

Exhibitions on Josiah's life and works will be mounted in the magnificent visitor centre at the wedgwood factory at Barlaston, five miles south of Stoke-On-Trent, and in the new City Museum and Art Gallery in the city centre.

The Wedgwood factory, only a few miles from its original site, is producing a large range of commemorative pottery. Those attending the factory's Visitor Centre may be able to see some of these pieces being made.

As well as a superb museum and cinema which shows a film on The Craftsmanship of Wedgwood, the centre has a demonstration hall illustrating the techniques used in the factory. Casters, throwers, ornamenters, enamellers, figure-makers and many other craftsmen and women can be seen hard at work.

The foundation stone for the factory at Barlaston, where 3,000 employees work today, was laid in 1938. Although only a few miles from Josiah's first works in Burslem, both the pottery industry and the Wedgwood company have taken enormous strides since Josiah's pioneering achievements.

He was born in Burslem in 1730, with a tradition of pottery in the family since 1656. He set up his own business in the town in 1759 after working in the family firm and with other partners.

One of the first designs Josiah produced in his own works was extremely successful: large quantities of cream-ware finished with a clear green glaze to decorate fruit and vegetable shapes — including melon, pineapple and cauliflower — which were popular with the rococco taste of the period.

In 1762, he moved to larger works in Burslem, where he first manufactured the earthenware cream-coloured pottery known as Queen's Ware, which was his greatest achievement and contribution to the British pottery industry. Josiah described it as "a species of earthenware for the table, quite new in appearance, covered with a rich and brilliant glaze, bearing sudden alterations of heat and cold, manufactured with ease and expedition, and consequently cheap".

Queen Charlotte was particularly pleased with a set of this cream-coloured earthenware, and agreed that it could be known as Queen's Ware. It was popular for many years, and its use spread over a vast area of the world.

One distinguished customer was Catherine the Great of Russia, who ordered a 925-piece dinner service.

With Queen's Ware, Wedgwood put fine earthenware within the reach of all but the poorest class for the first time. As a result, Josiah prospered sufficiently to buy an estate between Hanley and Newcastle-under-Lyme — two of the six pottery towns — in 1766, where he built a new model factory he named Etruria, and a large house for himself — Etruria Hall.

At his new factory, Josiah developed a fine-grained, smooth black pottery, very rich in hue — black basalt. He used neo-classical forms, as the new pottery was close to the black attic pottery of the ancient Greeks and Romans. His prophecy — "the black is sterling and will last forever" — remains true.

The most famous of all Wedgwood's inventions remains his jasper pottery, an unglazed vitreous stoneware coloured, green, primrose, mauve, or blue, which is the most common, by adding metallic oxides to the clay. His greatest achievement in jasper was a replica of the Portland Vase made in the first century.

As well as his enormous influence on pottery, Josiah was heavily involved in many other fields, which are illustrated in a special display on Josiah the man, in the visitor centre at the Wedgwood factory. Here, visitors will be able to learn about Josiah as a scientist — he invented the pyrometer to measure extreme heat in furnaces and kilns. His part in the building of the Trent and Mersey 'Grand Trunk' canal, which had an enormous impact on local industry providing cheap transport to the Liverpool docks and opening up export markets, is illustrated in the exhibition, which is open until the end of the year.

Another exhibition (July 14 to Oct. 30) at the City Museum and Art Gallery in Stoke-on-Trent compares the products from Wedgwood in the 18th century with those of the 20th century, and illustrates the development of the company and pottery techniques.

Welsh landscape grim, but beautiful

By PHYLLIS ZAUNER

Rugged, sombre Welsh countryside is home to more sheep than people

There are 6 million sheep in Wales, give or take a lamb or two. They roam free over the russet-colored hills, eating up Wales an inch at a time and feeling as entitled to use of the roads as the few automobiles that encroach on their territory.

As for the people of Wales, they are few and far between, particularly in mid-Wales, which is wildly beautiful and where the density is a scant 43 humans per square mile.

Somberness is the keynote of Welsh landscapes. Even those who love Wales the most find something grim and sad at times about the hills, which encompass the twin spirits of loneliness and solitude. Yet this desolate land produced a moody poet like Dylan Thomas, an unremitting individualist like Richard Burton, a legend like Tolkien's "Lord of the Rings."

By chance, we wandered into the County of Radnorshire, in mid-Wales, when travelling from England's Worcester to Snowdonia National Park in northwest Wales. From the moment we crossed the border it was apparent that Wales is not England. Here is a no-frills country with its own traditions, its own individual look and its own national language (so unpronounceable that it was used as a military code during World War II and totally baffled the Germans).

Radnorshire is a rural land. Ruddy-faced farmers walk in the streets of straggling little villages or gather together in clumps at sheep auctions that fill the town and overflow onto the highway, blocking traffic.

At Rhayader, we were introduced to the wonderful world of the Welsh male choral societies when the innkeeper where we took supper suggested we visit the weekly rehearsal upstairs.

The Welsh preoccupation with choral music began during a religious revival of the 1860s, when the preface of a popular hymnal stressed "the vital need for holding properly conducted rehearsals, at which the whole congregation should be present."

Living in a milieu in which music practically was everybody's concern was stimulating, for the conductor became the most respected man in town, and Welsh miners who quarried slate by day took to composing music by night. In a few years Welsh choristers were off to London to perform in concerts, and their fame now is worldwide.

The good news for tourists is that visitors still are encouraged to sit in on the weekly rehearsals, just as they were in the 1860s. Or one might get to hear extemporaneous harmony bursting from 60,000 throats at a Cardiff Rugby match or listen to a choir singing in one of the boxy Methodist chapels that came with the Industrial Revolution into steep-walled mining valleys.

We drove the mountain road that winds above the valley of Rheidol, across Devils Bridge 32 kilometres away, on our way to Cardigan Bay. Devils Bridge (actually three bridges built over the centuries) crosses a deep gorge, then the road again winds into a setting of rocks, wooded gorges and waterfalls.

In 32 kilometres we never met a car. Only the sheep, munching their way across Wales.

But the next day, in Snowdonia National Park, we saw a different view of Wales. Here the setting is green and forested and the road tags along beside the rambling Conway River, leading to the village of Betws-y Coed (pronounced Bet-toos a Coyd). Some say it has more beauty spots to the square mile than any other road in the United Kingdom.

Betws-y Coed (which means Chapel in the Trees) lies in a wooded valley where two rivers join. It has become the most famous village in Wales, so that in July and August it is overrun. But in late September and October it almost is deserted.

Snowdon Mountain, in the distance, is only 3,560 feet high, but it's sufficiently challenging to have made it a training ground for Sir Edmund Hillary.

While Wales literally is "a corner of the British Isles," it nevertheless is a tenuously held corner and always has been.

In the 13th century the Normans took the fertile south, while Rome's legions thrust in from Chester, King Gwynned's Snowdonian ramparts held out until English sea power cut off grain from Anglessy Island, and the royal prince was starved out. Conqueror King Edward solidified his conquest by building a chain of fortresses along the north shore: Harlech, Conwy, Blaemaris, Caernarvon.

And when the Welsh demanded a prince who belonged to them, Edward asked, "Would you accept someone who was born in Wales, who speaks no English and has never lived anywhere but Wales?" When the reply was affirmative, he presented to them his son, born just three days before at Caernarvon.

Ever since, the investiture of a new Prince of Wales has been celebrated at Caernarvon. Once these bristling fortresses represented a monumental yoke of English subjection. But today the picturesque ruins bring castle seekers who stay on to delight in the cliffs the castles guard.

Some parts of Northern Wales are dreary beyond belief. Slate-colored houses back up against slate-colored hills, sometimes facing an enormous slide of slate-color scree, the permanent waste material of slate mining.

It is in the slate-quarrying district and in farming country that the Welsh language most often is heard. There has been a great flap in recent years as to whether this cumbersome language, which only 20 per cent of the population can speak, should be abandoned or promoted. Nevertheless, the language revival is on the upswing, and Welsh is being taught.

Nationalism also has revived some old crafts and traditions. Perhaps one of the most charming is the carving of love spoons, given since medieval times as love tokens. They're available in shops all over Wales, along with sheep's wool mittens, woven scarves and slate with unique carvings.

EMILY CARR was not only a greatly gifted painter. She was endowed with a remarkable sense of the absurd and the humorous. And a love of children. Portraying Emily in The Wonder of it All, Margaret Martin lights up the face of Carol Williams (Erin Grimmer) the little girl she loved and wished to adopt. World premiere of the musical based on her life by Don Harron and Elaine and Norman Campbell, will take place beginning Friday, June 27 at Newcombe Auditorium. It is a presentation of the Four Seasons Musical Theatre directed by Peter Mannering.

Symphony puts out menu

By AUDREY JOHNSON

It's possible that few past seasons have presented Victoria Symphony subscribers with more material for cogitation than is contained in the just-distributed 1980-81 season brochures.

For those who don't opt for all twelve, how to choose a season of six concerts — that will be the knotty question with so much fascinating music and so many interesting artists providing an irresistable banquet!

What it will come down to, presumably will be whether you favor pianists over string players or vice versa and whether you are locked into tradition or have a more adventurous musical taste.

But as a matter of fact, Maestro Paul Freeman has so cleverly planned his season that there is scarcely one pair of concerts that does not balance things traditional with an excursion into lesser known areas.

A notable exception is the all-Mozart program in January which will present conductor-violinist Alexander Schneider. An all 20th century program, also in January, contains the music of Aaron Copland, Edward Elgar, Bartok and de Falla.

But those who shy away from the 20th century's music, please note: the Bartok work is the Music for Strings, Percussion and Celeste, which is nothing less than thrilling. And that is also the program which will present the world's greatest contralto, Canadian Metropolitan Opera star Maureen Forrester, singing Elgar's beautiful suite, Sea Pictures. Noted Canadian conductor Pierre Hetu will be on the podium.

Altogether it's hard to imagine anyone forgoing such a combination of star material.

In October Freeman combines the first Victoria Symphony performance of Healey Willan's Symphony No.1 (honoring the Canadian composer's centenary) and a similarly first performance of South American composer Ginastera's Estancia Dances, with the appearance of a fine young Canadian pianist, Louis Lortie, performing the Liszt Piano Concerto No.1.

March will bring Eugene Fodor, the first violinist from the western world to win the prestigious Tchaikovsky Competition. That was in 1974. Today, an exclusive RCA recording artist, Fodor is among the youngest artists at the top of the international tree. He is to perform the Khachaturian Violin Concerto with Paul Freeman and as a foil to this brilliant 20th century work the Maestro has poised the great Brahms Symphony No.2.

And who could possible want to miss the season's finale when Carl Orff's appealing Carmina Burana is performed with the Victoria Choral Society and soloists including soprano Margarita Noye (last season's Mimi) and baritone Bernard Turgeon.

There is no staleness in this season, with many first-time Victoria performances and much more than a passing acknowledgement of Canadian musicians and composers, including Victorians Murray Adaskin and Rudolf Komorous.

Then there is the four-concert pops series, probably the best yet offered with Stanley Black returning and Freeman conducting a Gershwin 'Spectacular' with guest stars; also the Kingston Trio to say nothing of Mitch Miller.

History of sex

SEX IN HISTORY, by Reay Tannahill. McGraw-Hill Ryerson. $25.95.

History books have always given women a raw deal, which isn't surprising when one considers that until comparatively recently historians were misogynous monks who fashioned facts and rumors into a record that conformed with the political and personal views held by their superiors. Over the centuries, the record has been stripped of much material that was only relevant at the time it was written, leaving a barren account of events from which, in the main, women were excluded.

This is now changing, and women are responsible. Modern women historians, dissatisfied by the welter of dates, battles and treaties that has always passed as history, have recognized that the people involved were motivated as much by personal feelings as by political considerations, and their research and lively writing has brought a bright new dimension to history. With the exception of historians of costume, women appear to have the field to themselves and they are making good use of it.

And none more so than Reay Tannahill, who pioneered the concept that human history consists of but two essentials — food and sex — and that without these determinants there would be no history at all. In her now classic Food in History (1973) she demonstrated that by looking at what people ate and how they grew it, human history takes on an entirely different perspective from the one we were brought up to believe. Changing such a perspective takes some doing, but she did it, and masterfully. Now she has triumphed again with a scintillating new work, Sex in History.

Perspective

This book is not only a history of both sex and the relationships between the sexes, but also a history of how sex and sexuality have influenced the whole course of human development. Tannahill has managed this by placing the human sex drive and its social and moral consequences in their widest historical perspective, taking in the whole panorama of sexual attitudes, customs, and practices in all the world's major civilizations from earliest times to the present day.

She begins at the beginning by asking, pertinently, whether we are descended from the monogamous gibbon or the promiscuous chimpanzee. Early man, like the primates, was excited by buttocks and used the rear approach (as the Hottentots still do). When untold thousands of years later he switched to the frontal position, breasts — and faces — replaced buttocks in interest and for the first time women obtained not only a view but a modicum of pleasure.

So much for the nomadic hunting and gathering period. When food became scarce, man and woman found a cave conveniently close to a food source, and stayed put. When a child arrived it dawned on the man that he must be responsible, and this did wonders for his ego. Already conscious of his pre-eminence as hunter, he now became insufferable as (in his belief) the only begetter of life. This was the neolithic period. Before it, man and woman had been more or less equal in status. During it, man became certain of his own superiority. After it (and until the last decade) he was unquestionably the master.

When we come to the beginning of recorded history, we find that man's view of himself as superior to women in all ways had become law and custom in the earliest civilizations — those in the Near East — where woman became a chattel first of her father, then her husband, and then her son. She was tolerated as a necessary vessel for man's semen, the life-force. (Not until the 17th century was it discovered that woman contributed to procreation.)

From here, Tannahill guides us to ancient Greece, partial heir to the Near Eastern tradition, where men, to escape from their vacuous wives (and as a change from pederasty), enjoyed the company of hetairai, highly educated courtesans who supplied all who could afford it with mental and physical gratification. The hetairai, we learn, knew a thing or three about contraception and their tricks were to become known in Rome, where superficially respectable matrons took lovers and indulged themselves with luxury goods. A falling birth rate (too few legionaires) and an imbalance of luxury imports over exports helped to cause the decline and fall of the Roman Empire.

These were triumphs of a negative kind, but they didn't lead anywhere. Neolithic attitudes, fortified by Near Eastern (Hebrew) monotheistic culture won in the end. When the Christian Church took over the Western world as successor to Rome, social and sexual relationships conformed to Hebrew custom. And to all the other prejudices, the early Church Fathers added their own. Sex became a sin and homosexuality a danger to the state.

After exploring these early periods at length, Tannahill then turns to Asia until the Middle Ages, and to the Arab world. In this enthralling section we are expertly guided through the intricate sex manuals of China, Japan, India and Islam. As in the West, man was dominant, but mutually enjoyable sex was encouraged as a contribution to the expansion of the spirit. To the best of my knowledge, Tannahill is the first to deal explicitly with these sex manuals in a respectable book, and for this healthy step we can thank the freer atmosphere of the last decade.

Ovid's insipid Ars Amatoria pales into insignificance beside ancient China's I-ching, the Taoist sex manual in which the emphasis is placed on yin and yang; Japan's erotic I-shin-po; India's marvellous Kamasutra and, perhaps the most enlightened of all, Islam's The Perfumed Garden. All these manuals, along with books about erotic Tantric art, are now easily obtainable in translation so there is no need to dwell on them here.

It should be mentioned, however, that the Kamasutra and The Perfumed Garden were the first sex manuals to mention love. Not the romantic wishy-washy variety of early Egypt or the bawdiness of Greece or the tricks of the trade described cynically by Ovid, but pure love of man for woman. This is important, because the Crusaders were so impressed that when they returned from Islam they took the idea and converted it into a European tradition of courtly love, troubadours, and chivalry that was to influence the whole image of woman in the West.

Despite the Christian Church's continued disapproval of both sex and women, things progressed from the 12th century on. Courtly love (a pale copy of the Arabs' pure love), the importation from Byzantium of the cult of the Virgin Mary, the 16th century emphasis on family, and the 17th century discovery that woman was not an incubator but a mother, all led to the 19th century's blending of morality and motherliness into a new virtuous, unattainable angelic image. This last was a Bad Thing as it was the cause of Victorianism, women's frustration, Tennyson, pedestals, and the epidemic spread of venereal disease.

And so to the present where The Pill has ended 5,000 years of male supremacy and men, in shock because they cannot ensure their partners' sexual satisfaction every time, have, we learn, turned increasingly to masturbation, pornography and hardcore movies, the latter expressly designed to feed man's deep resentment (usually suppressed) over his inadequacy to satisfy the popular image of the liberated woman. Have pity, ladies. After lording it for millenia, it's a bit much to expect men to adapt in the course of a single decade.

No cheap thrills

A distressing side-effect is the increasing popularity of psychiatry and psychoanalysis, which encourages the discontented to explore their own internal problems, instead of seeking to arrive at some domestic modus vivendi. And, as more and more are discovering, deeper knowledge of self does not contribute much to a more tolerant understanding of others.

Tannahill has cross-referenced her text and I found myself turning back or forwards as directed — and then reading on and going back to the beginning of a chapter and generally losing my place. It didn't matter. It's that kind of book, absorbing no matter where you start reading.

Those who expect Sex in History to provide erotic titillation will come sadly unstuck. References to sex manuals, eunuchs, dildoes, sodomites and so on are to advance the narrative, not to provide cheap thrills. This is a book containing a wealth of well-researched information about a subject most of us know all too little about. It is presented with elegance, wit and humor and a refreshing lack of emotion and editorializing. It is a remarkable book, scholarly in every way except that it is readable.

P. D. James . . . late triumph over adversity

'A difficult stage in my writing life'

By WAYNE WARGA

P.D. James claims that she wanted to be a novelist since she saw her first book and certainly since she began to read. Marriage, children, fate, misfortune and work interfered, but she never forgot. Her first book was published when she was 39.

Seven books later, she is widely held to be in the forefront of British mystery writers and, at the age of 60, has written outside the genre for the first time. The result is Innocent Blood, a book that critics are saying has raised mystery writing to an art form while at the same time proclaiming it isn't a mystery. It's a commercial success as well — $813,000 paperback sale, $350,000 movie sale, Book-of-the-Month Club selection — all of the perks most writers dream about.

It is almost as though P.D. James is biologically and emotionally exact to the image of British mystery writers. The Oxford-born author is given to sedate dresses, sensible shoes, bright exclamations of pleasure, and has about her an all-pervading demeanor of decency and respectability. She has two daughters and five grandchildren.

She has dealt — triumphed is more exact — with adversity. Her husband, a physician, returned from the Second World War with probable schizophrenia and remained in and out of hospitals until his death in 1964.

In 1949 — "by then I realized almost certainly he would not get better," she says — she went to work in the National Health Service to support her daughters and her husband. Twelve years ago she qualified to be a senior civil servant in the criminal department of Britain's Home Office.

"You might say my professional career uniquely prepared me for writing mysteries. Certainly it proved vital for me because I want the reader to think he's there, to know I've been there. I've worked with politicians, ministers of the crown, judges, magistrates, senior police officials, and it has all been invaluable.

"I also love writing about London. It's important for a novel, especially to me, to have a strong sense of place. It helps determine characters and influences the relationship between characters and action."

James is the author's maiden name, and the initials stand for Phyllis Dorothy. P.D. James is a somewhat formidable byline, but she didn't intend it to be so. "I certainly wasn't trying to sound formidable or to appear to be a man — at least not deliberately. White is my married name but I didn't want to use it — I had taken it on when I married and it wasn't really me. I wrote down Phyllis Dorothy James, then Phyllis D. James, and on and on. When I got to P.D. James it was how I wanted it to be. Short, too."

There is much discussion among critics and mystery buffs about the restrictions and constraints of the form. It is something that James mentions as well, and she herself defines them precisely:

"You have a murder which is a mystery. There is a closed circle of suspects, three or four people with credible reasons for committing the murder. You have, in my case, a professional detective. He finds clues and information which, as he discovers them, are also available to the reader. And at the end of the story there is a credible and satisfactory resolution which the reader could have arrived at as well. But you cannot be unfair, cannot, for instance, make the villian a minor character who has been mostly passed over in the story."

The professional detective she mentions does not appear in Innocent Blood, but he is the central figure of her other books. He is Cmdr. Adam Dalgliesh of Scotland Yard, a poet as well as a policeman, a man who is a realistic moralist much like his creator.

Literature figures in his life just as it does in P.D. James' — who believes "no man is actively unhappy when at a good meal and, for me, when I'm reading a good book. They are an escape and a strengthening influence which enables one to cope with problems and tragedy. I have such a sense of gratitude for the books that have influenced me. Jane Austen in particular. And among modern writers, Evelyn Waugh and Graham Greene. I like to read biographies, especially biographies of writers. I think writers generally feel a lot of pain — pain and anger — than they're willing to reveal."

Among the mystery writers who have influenced her, she particularly likes traditionalists such as Ngaio Marsh, Josephine Tey and Dorothy Sayer.

"I write in scenes, almost as though I was seeing a film. And I put them together in the end. But before I begin the plot is worked out in tremendous detail, and the characters and time of day are all listed. I know what everybody is doing every single moment of the day.

"I'm at a difficult stage in my writing life. I very much enjoy writing out of the traditional restraints. But the plot I have simmering away is obviously a mystery, and I think I'm going to bring in Cmdr. Dalgliesh again. I don't see why I have to work in any particular form, and maybe the next after that will be a straight novel again. Once I begin writing the process is quite fast. But a great deal of time is spent incubating a book and I can't hurry that. It's as if the whole book exists in a kind of limbo outside myself and I have to get in touch with it. That's where most of the time goes."

"In the 60th year, one is so far down the other side of the hill one has a very strong sense of time, of having so little left. And so many books to write."

A thriller . . . but much more

By ANTHONY JENKINS

INNOCENT BLOOD, by P.D. James. Oxford. $14.95.

Over the past few years P.D. James has established herself as the leading contemporary exponent of the detective story. With Innocent Blood she moves away from the crime novel proper, temporarily discarding Adam Dalgleish of Scotland Yard to present a psychological thriller in the vein of Winston Graham's The Walking Stick. But, with this novel, comparisons drop away; P.D. James has come into her own.

Although the novel moves far beyond the confines of the suspense story, Innocent Blood does have that first essential, an enthralling plot. Having assiduously removed the dust-jacket so as not to spoil things for myself, I don't want to give anything away here.

Suffice to say that Philippa, the central character, is an intelligent 18-year-old just about to take up a scholarship to Cambridge. Acutely conscious of being an adopted child and haunted by half-remembered flashes from her earlier life, she decides to find her real parents and applies for a copy of her birth certificate under the recent provisions of the Children Act.

We then follow her attempts to trace her natural mother and her shifting feelings towards her and her adoptive parents once she succeeds. But someone else is also anxious to trace Philippa's mother, and the novel plays the central story against that second search by this man from the past.

With suspense stories, I always find myself trying to catch the author out over a detail which disrupts the logic of the plot or about which a character could not possibly have known. James covers every angle of approach and is scrupulously fair with her red-herrings and surprises. She times these revelations with a dazzling skill, surreptitiously placing a minor character or a crucial detail in so natural a way that its later importance to the plot is realized without the least air of contrivance.

Tingling suspense

And the cross-over between the two stories creates a tingling suspense. There's a moment towards the end of the book when one can hardly bear to follow the description of Philippa at her adoptive father's house, so conscious is one of the things that might be happening simultaneously in her mother's flat.

But the plot is only the most obvious of this novel's attibutes. P.D. James has always taken the genre seriously. In her hands, the crime story is as complex as any straight novel. To say that, is, of course, to suggest that the thriller is usually somehow less satisfying, a pop sub-genre, as though Dickens, Wilkie Collins and her namesake, Henry James, had not shown how "respectable" the genre could be.

Like these predecessors, P.D. James depends on character and assures that each turn in her plot is motivated by the personalities within it. The mind of Phillipa herself is explained by her background that includes both her adoptive and natural parents. The emotional inadequacies of her sardonic adoptive father have much to do with her romantic attraction to the idea of her real mother. In fact, one of the novel's strongest threads depends on Philippa's (and the reader's) changing feelings for her natural mother: from antipathy to love, to horror, to shared empathy.

Crucial to those shifts of sympathy are our reactions to the other characters: Philippa's anguished and inadequate adoptive mother, her friend Gabriel with his campy malice, and several of the minor characters in that second strand of the plot which unfurls the story of that other man, himself a lonely though surprisingly complex figure.

Oddly though, in a context of portraits of such depth and range, I had uneasy feelings about the way James has drawn Philippa's natural mother. In the light of her past (which I won't explain!), she seems too literate a sensibility, and the one flaw in the book was for me the way a lengthy extract from her mother's journal had the exact "voice" of Philippa's own mind, which has, after all, got her through "O" and "A" levels to the Cambridge scholarship.

Scenic detail

Such a reservation becomes the merest flicker, though, due to the convincing reality of the novel's scenic detail. Here again one turns to Dickens. I can think of no other novelist who has caught the rhythms of London so precisely. After reading the book, one knows the social patterns of Pimlico, with its shabby thoroughfares and jaded hotels, its exclusive squares and side-streets; or there's the area around Marylebone with its Saturday morning street-market.

So real a world gives added credibility to the peculiar circumstance on which the plot turns, as if to remind us that actual life is often more surprising than fiction. In P.D. James' books, death is not an abstract game to be played out in cosy half-belief between writer and reader. It, too, is imagined with the same authentic physicality:

"The sharp point seemed to him important. It was the first deep thrust into her flesh which he imagined might take all his strength and purpose. That done, the final twist and withdrawal would be little more than a reflex action."

But what finally emerges from this novel are a number of truths which lie behind the direct statement of plot, character and scene. "We all use each other," says Philippa, and one can see how each character defines his own identity by what he takes from another, feeding off or rejecting that person.

It's a fact of life that applies particularly to any novelist, and that irony does not escape P.D. James. Philippa also becomes a writer, and one suspects she echoes her creator in describing her artistic viewpoint: "Some writers can only write about their own direct experience. That's not the kind of writer I am or want to be. I said that we all use each other, but I hope to use people with rather more subtlety than that."

In Innocent Blood, P.D. James has transmuted her own experience and observation of life into an impressive analysis of love: how all of us need to love and be loved, the sort of things that warp or encourage those feelings, and how love can destroy or redeem. Unlike the usual thriller, hers is a novel to come back to for its integrity, wisdom and truth.

The artist and his mystery

By WALTER KELLYTHORNE

DRAGON LADY, by Silver Donald Cameron. McClelland & Stewart. $13.95.

SHORELINES, by Roy MacGregor. McClelland & Stewart. $13.95.

Here are two first novels that have two facets in common: they are both written by journalists, and they are both next to impossible to put down until the last page is turned.

Dragon Lady is what can only be called a thriller: there are hit men, a beautiful heroine and a handsome hero, adventure on land and sea from New York to Nova Scotia, a plot that involves the Middle East, and Canadian resources and armaments peddled by a ruthless trader whose intelligence is equalled only by his greed.

The heroine is married to the hero's brother, who is involved with the trader. But she wants out of the marriage. The hero has never been married and doesn't really want to be. Together they wend their way through this adventure. What, dear reader, will happen in the end?

Read Dragon Lady to find out. Amidst all the running and loving there's plenty of land and seascape that are as much a part of this story as all the human goings-on. If Silver Donald Cameron can more or less repeat himself in his next novel (and his next, and his next), he'll make himself a fortune. Perhaps it will help to balance the wealth made by the traders and the international companies he dislikes so much.

Roy MacGregor shares much of Cameron's love and eye for land and water — in Shorelines it's northern Ontario and Algonquin Park — and also shares his passion for mystery.

Shorelines, though, combines a very personal mystery with history in a way that will appeal to every seeker of themselves and to every aficionado of Canadian art — and of the art of Tom Thomson in particular.

Eleanor Philpott, a divorced Toronto librarian in her mid-forties who is "in mourning for herself", has become convinced that Thomson was her father. With the aid of a psychiatrist, her own pain and a determination to unravel the secrets of her life, Eleanor heads north to the lake country where Thomson lived and worked.

More mystery awaits her there: an old man who was close to Thomson and who is reluctant to talk to her, an old lady who might have been Thomson's mother, and Eleanor's own continuing reluctance and surprising courage.

Russel Pemberton, the old man, tells us much of the story in a series of dozy flashbacks, and through his senses we are led into a pre-war world of a small Ontario town that is host to a man whose paintings are part of this country as surely as the land he loved so much.

The man who was Tom Thomson emerges — or, at least, the man whom Roy MacGregor imagines him to be. A person, anyway, demythologized and real.

Tension and mystery underlie every page of this novel. Who is Eleanor Philpott? And who is Jenny Taylor? What happened to Tom Thomson? The popular theory assumes that he fell from his canoe while he was urinating and drowned. But why was his fishing line wrapped around his ankles? Why was his head bruised? Why was there no water in his lungs?

No one knows. No one, probably, will ever know.

Japanese cars the villain: Gray

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — Instead of renegotiating the Canada-U.S. auto pact, the North American auto industry should present a united front against Japanese imports, Industry Minister Herb Gray said Friday.

Gray told a panel discussion during a special seminar on the auto pact that although some improvements for Canada may be obtained for the 15-year-old trade agreement, the problems facing the auto industry stem from other factors. These include a U.S. recession and high levels of Japanese-imported cars.

Gray and other Canadian officials begin consultations with U.S. officials over the auto pact June 27 in Washington.

"Our consultations with the U.S., therefore, are not intended to be a total renegotiation of the auto pact," Gray said. "This would not be advisable since I do not believe it would be in Canada's interest to disturb those aspects of the pact that are working well from Canada's point of view."

Gray also warned that attempts to alter the pact would come at a time when more Americans than Canadians face layoffs during a U.S. election year.

"Japan sells us almost half a billion dollars in cars and parts, while we sell them a little more than $6 million worth of these products," Gray said.

He said Japanese manufacturing investments in Canada would be preferable to putting up trade barriers to reduce the import flow.

"This is especially true for Canada, which even more than the United States depends on exports for its prosperity and one would not want to move unnecessarily into a situation where there could be some risk of reprisal against our major export industries, he said.

Patrick Lavelle, president of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers Association of Canada, called for a renegotiation of the pact if the talks in Washington aren't fruitful.

He criticized several terms in the pact and at one point accused Simon Reisman, who served as the chief Canadian negotiator of the auto pact, of "selling out the industry in 1965." Reisman was on the panel with Gray and Lavelle.

However, Reisman said the pact has served Canada's auto industry well and it should rebound.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Green of Pt. Hardy, B.C., take pleasure in announcing the recent marriage of their son, Dennis Robert, to Miss Lynn Wilson of Hinton, Alberta.

The wedding took place in the company of immediate family, in Hinton, Alberta, on March 29, 1980. Miss Sherri Wilson, sister of the bride, attended Miss Wilson. Mr. Robert Redman, long-time friend of the groom, attended Mr. Green, assisted by his brother, Mr. Ken Redman.

All members of the bride and groom's families were present to witness this happy union and to enjoy the delightful wedding supper prepared by the bride's family.

Mr. and Mrs. Dennis R. Green now reside in Edson, Alberta.

Ives — Rombough

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace O. Rombough are pleased to announce the sixth month anniversary of the marriage of their eldest daughter, Catherine Marjorie, to Gary Arthur Ives, younger son of Mr. Arthur Ives, Victoria, B.C. The candlelight service took place Saturday, December 1, 1979, in Gordon United Church, Langford, with Rev. J. Bell officiating at the double-ring ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father and mother the bride wore a white shanghi-crepe wedding gown, made by her mother. The rose pattern lace wrist length set in sleeves and V-shaped neckline were edged in half-inch pleating. The short train flowed along under the finger-tip ellusion veil which fell gently from her small rose lace covered headdress trimmed in seed pearls. She carried a beautiful bouquet of silk flowers in golds, yellow, white and coral as well as a bride's Bible, given by her parents.

The bride's attendants were younger sister, Elizabeth Rombough, sister-in-law, Mrs. Robert (Sheryl) Rombough and Louise Watson. They wore coral shanghi-crepe gowns with floral lace edged capes and carried bouquets which matched the bride's.

The groom's attire was a brown tuxedo, bone colored shirt and white with coral silk boutonierre. Wearing brown tuxedos, yellow shirts and white silk boutonierres the groom's attendants were, brother of the bride, Robert Rombough, as best man, groom's brother, Michael Ives and nephew, John Marsh.

The dinner dance reception was held in the Westwind Hall, Langford. Yellow roses decorated the three-tiered pillared cake which was topped with a bride and groom. The coral candlelight ceremony candle was relit during the dinner.

A very nice and appropriate toast to the bride was given by a long-time friend and neighbor, Mr. Howard Green. A special song was requested by the bride's parents.

The happy couple honeymooned in Seattle, Vancouver and back on Vancouver Island. Mr. and Mrs. Gary Ives are residing in Victoria, B.C.

Mintoft — Weaver

St. Stephen's Anglican Church, Calgary, was the scene on May 10, 1980, of the marriage of Catherine Margaret, elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. Weaver, of Victoria, to Jon Fredric, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Mintoft, of Calgary. The double ring ceremony was conducted by the Rev. Trevor Walters. Music before and during the service was played on flute, classical guitar and organ.

The bride was lovely in white chiffon, and carried a white Cattleya orchid framed in greenery, trailing ivy and stephanotis. Attending the bride was her sister, Sheila, as Maid of Honour, Kathi Mintoft and Wendy Best. Her attendants complimented the stained glass windows in their dresses of dark blue with white jackets and they carried sheaf bouquets of mixed spring flowers. The best man was Robert Morgan and ushers were Patrick Welkovics and Neil Tranberg. The groom and his attendants wore navy blue tuxedos.

The reception was held in the officers Mess of Currie Barracks. Out of town guests were welcomed from B.C., Alberta, Winnipeg, California and Spain. Telegrams were received from England and France. The toast to the bride and groom was given by Harry Wilmot, a friend of the family.

After a honeymoon in California Mr. and Mrs. Jon Mintoft are residing in Calgary.

Hunt — Yates

Dr. Maxwell Yates and Mrs. Gwen Yates take pleasure in announcing the marriage on June 5th of their daughter, Barbara, to Mr. Hugh Hunt.

Getty — McLachlan

Mr. and Mrs. Robert McLachlan are pleased to announce the recent marriage of their daughter, Julie Ann, to John Charles Getty, son of Mr. and Mrs. Chas Getty of North Vancouver.

The wedding took place on Saturday, April 26th, at St. David's By The Sea with Rev. Andrew Gates officiating.

A reception was held at the home of the bride's parents on Ebony Place. The beautiful silver and white horseshoe adorning the wedding cake was used by the bride's grandparents 55 years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Getty will reside in North Vancouver.

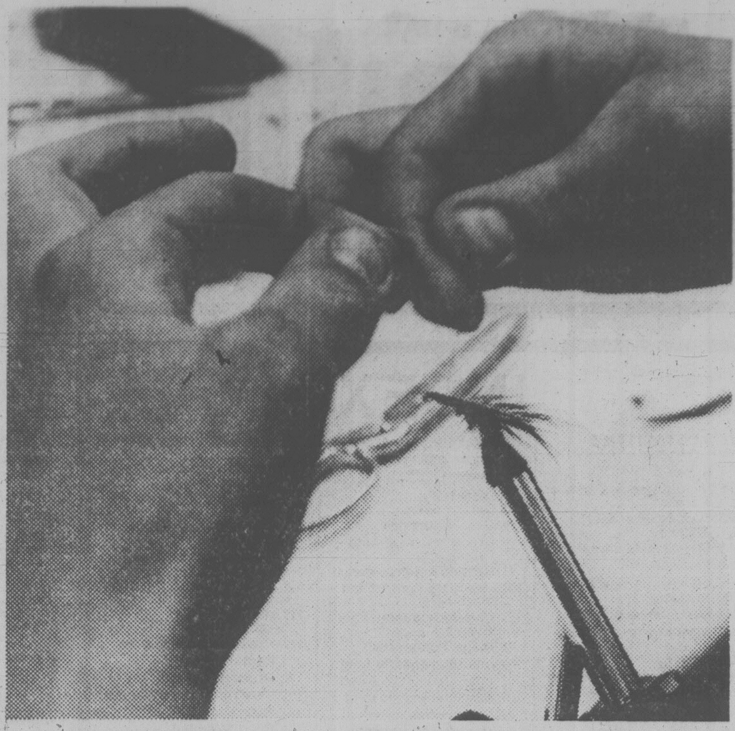
HERE'S HOW — Instructor Marion Price, fourth from left, shows summer employees of the Boys and Girls' Clubs of Greater Victoria how to tie a fly while, in the close-up, volunteer Bill Miles, 15, gets down to fine points. The instruction is part of the preparation for Discovery '80, a four-week program which will be open to boys and girls aged eight to 13. The children will learn back-packing, horseback riding, fishing, canoeing, sailing and archery and have weekly outings and overnight excursions. Sessions will be held from June 30 to July 25 and from July 28 to Aug. 22. Each session will cost $25 plus $3 per week for transportation costs and special events. (John McKay photos).



Mortgage rush propping rates

By AL FORREST

Home-buyers are lining up for mortgages at anything below 13 per cent, cutting deeply into the supply of funds, lending firms said Friday.

Some companies were concerned they might run dry, especially in cash for five-year mortgages.

The pent-up demand, and the brisk bidding, was keeping the interest rate from falling below 12.75 per cent — at least so far.

In fact Montreal Trust, which cut its rate to 12.75 per cent on Monday, had to return it to 13 per cent on Friday because of the overpowering demand for mortgages.

"The volume of business, both in Victoria and Vancouver, is incredibly high," local Montreal Trust manager D.C. Field said.

People have been waiting a long time for rates to come down and now they are eager to buy before house prices get any higher.

Banks also reported a signficant increase in business.

They reported a sharp drop in funds for long-term mortgages but said it was not yet a shortage. The supply of one-year money was still plentiful.

Alan Aldous, local manager of Royal Trust, also noted a scarcity of five-year money.

He said investors can remember rates of 13.5 per cent on five-year deposits earlier this year and now they can only get about 11 per cent. Many are depositing funds for one year only, expecting the rates to be higher next year.

This means companies have plenty of one-year mortgage funds, but a diminishing supply of long-term money.

The Bank of Canada has signalled for another reductionin interest rates but most local companies believe the bottom is near, because of the heavy demand for loans.

Another drop in the mortgage rate of half a point, to the range of 12.25 to 12.5 per cent, might come soon and could turn out to be the bottom before rates begin to rise again.

The U.S. federal discount rate, the equivalent to the Bank of Canada, has been reduced to 11 per cent from 13 per cent in the past two weeks.

All other American rates have moved downward.

In Canada, the banks have been holding their prime rate at 13.75 per cent, despite a half-point drop Thursday by the Bank of Canada to 11.29.

Most Victoria observers believe a half-point drop in rates across the board can be expected soon, which would knock the prime to 13.25.

Harry Steele, local manager of the Bank of British Columbia, said a half-point drop "appears almost certain" in the near future.

With interest rates down, depositors are getting about two percentage points less for their money than was available during the heady weeks over the winter when cash in the bank was the best investment around.

Now there is a renewed interest in the stock market.

Trust company counsellors are steering their customers back into the market, including a suggestion that their own stocks, and those of the banks, represent a better investment now that interest rates are down and appear to be stablizing.

Union invited to join gov't health care probe

The Hospital Employees' Union will take part in a government study of the province's long-term care program after all.

Isabel Kelly, assistant deputy health minister said on Friday the union has been invited to become part of the review team looking into charges of inadequate staffing and improper care in some of the nursing homes and private hospitals in the province.

Earlier the union's request to be a part of the government's review had been turned down on the grounds there was already representation from the B.C. Medical Association and the Registered Nurses Association.

The government apparently felt that any more on the committee would have made it unwieldy.

The union, however, announced on Thursday it would carry out its own probe into the problems.

Edna Galbraith, president of the B.C. Association of Private Care Facilities said long-term care facilities in B.C. now undergo frequent inspections to ensure adequate care.

But she said there may be some basis for the concerns expressed by the union.

Those will have to be determined one way or another by the government study, she added.

HEU said in a news release Thursday there is a factory atmosphere in some of the long-term care facilities with patients being drugged so that staff won't have to spend time with them.

The union also complained of patients being dirty and covered with bedsores and taking part in "activation programs" which meant being wheeled in front of a television set to sit for hours.

NEAR THE SEA

If you yearn for the cosy warmth of wood and the fragrance of cedar and your own private world, you must see this enchanting home. Nestled amidst a gorgeous fenced acre (that seems like 5) it is screened from the road and neighbours by lush natural foliage with lovely lawn and flower gardens surrounding the house, open to the sun all day. The house is solid cedar with 2 BR's, 5-pce. bath, separate DR, and a 2-storey vaulted LR with FP, and attached sundeck facing south. Skylights and dormer windows produce a bright and cheery atmosphere throughout. Outside are separate workshop, a carport and even a fishpond and many other extras that you must see for yourself. This is a very special property indeed. MLS 46369.

Smoke alarm huddle planned

The city is lining up a meeting for next week with provincial government staff, the Victoria fire department and city representatives to get to the bottom of the nursing home smoke alarm controversy.

Ald. Bob Wright said he had asked assistant city manager Colin Crisp to try to get officials of the attorney-general's ministry to meet city officials to discuss the problem.

Fire chief Eric Simmons started it all when he pointed out last month that the smoke alarms given to nursing homes last year by the province did not meet the National Building Code fire safety requirements.

The disclosure came while the fire department is in the midst of issuing upgrading orders for some 30 nursing homes in Victoria, based on provincial guidelines and the National Building Code.

Lawrence Hitchmough, owners of the first one on the list, Grant Place, 998 Humboldt, appealed to city council for relaxation of the order.

While he determines what improvements he can afford to make now, aldermen agreed Thursday night to write to the province pointing out the hardships created by one department for the facilities licensed by another branch of government.

Attorney-General Allan Williams, who is responsible for the provincial fire commissioner, has said Simmons was being too tough and enforcing measures which were more restrictive than those applying elsewhere in B.C.

Busy summer for militia units

Members of B.C.'s 12 militia units will be spending their summer vacations upgrading their military skills at regular armed forces bases throughout the province.

Major Derek Bamford, officer in charge of the annual Area Rank and Trade School (ARTS) of the army reserve says about 350 part-time soldiers will spend eight weeks in specialized training.

All four of the combat arms of the reserve are represented in the program.

The infantry reserves will be at Nanaimo Military Camp, the armored reserves at Vernon, while engineering reserves will be at Chilliwack and the artillery reserves at Victoria's Bay Street Armory.

Victoria militia members will take instructions either at the Armory or at Work Point base.

Bamford says that in addition a one-week staff course will be offered in Victoria for junior officers. There will also be a driver training course offered through militia service battalion bases at Sea Island and Victoria, and a casualty aid course at Work Point for members interested in becoming medics.

Defective hair dryers recalled

OTTAWA (CP) — A Jerome Alexander hairdryer model is being recalled because of a manufacturing defect that causes the dryers to blow out pieces of hot elements, the Canadian Standards Association says in a statement

The association has received three complaints about model 4-1250DV manufactured in Hong Kong and says consumers should stop using them immediately.

Dryers with a red dot have been inspected and are not included in the recall. The unit is distributed in Canada by a division of Giovanni Management (Canada) Ltd., Montreal.

U.S. steelmen's tempers rise at Canada's feat

By JANE SEABERRY
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — When thinking of Canada, Americans probably envision a Canadian Mountie, with his trusty German shepherd, Rex, serenading dreamy-eyed damsels while tall pines whisper in the background.

What some Americans are only beginning to see is the chugging, heaving, sweating Canadian steel mills whose efficiency, profitability and low-cost steel may fast remove the romance from relations between the United States and its largest trading partner.

North America's fish, fur and lumber capital of the 1800s has become one of the most efficient steel producers in the world and the second largest steel exporter to the United States, behind Japan. Stelco, Canada's largest steelmaker, this year will open the world's first new integrated steel mill since 1974, while American mills are shutting down and laying off workers. The newest integrated (all manufacturing steps in one location) mill in America was built in the middle 1960s.

"The facility has all the latest techniques in production," said Donald F. Barnett, a vice president and economist at the American Iron and Steel Institute. "It incorporates all the cost savings and improvements we would like to have."

While some U.S. steelmakers, in the red, are crying the blues, Canadians are basking in the black. Stelco had profits last year of $156.9 million on $2.1 billion in revenues, while U.S. Steel Corp., America's biggie, had a loss of $293 million on sales of $12.9 billion.

What is the price of success? U.S. Steel's Chairman David M. Roderick has hinted that he may file dumping or countervailing duty actions against the Canadian steel industry, a move that could result in heavy fines for the Canadians if they are found guilty. U.S. Steel would have to prove that the Canadians are selling steel here at prices below their costs of production or that the Canadian steelmakers are receiving subsidies from their government to help them sell steel cheaply here and that those actions are injuring the U.S. industry.

But steel experts in Canada and here agree that it is unlikely the Canadians are violating any trade laws. They're just more efficient steelmakers.

The U.S govrnment several years ago even allowed some Canadian companies to sell steel here at prices below the trigger price mechanism — a system in which steel imports brought into the country under a specific price automatically trigger a government investigation — because they legally produced steel so cheaply.

One reason for the Canadians' success is "our tradition of expectations and momentum," said Henry C. Winters, general manager for marketing of Algoma Steel Corp. Ltd. of Sault Ste. Marie, Ont. "It's like being on the winning team," Winters paused, then chuckled, "like the Yankees."

But dumping really isn't a laughing matter, and the Canadians say they are watching U.S. Steel closely. The United States filed dumping complaints against the Canadians in 1977 involving pig iron, a minor matter that was never pursued beyond the complaint-filing stage, the Canadians said.

"We don't need to dump," Winters said. "And we don't want to dump. We want to establish long-term relationships with large companies in the U.S."

Winters also said his company is considering filing dumping complaints of its own against the Europeans and Japanese who are already targets of dumping actions by U.S. Steel. Both the International Trade Commission and the Commerce Department are investigating import practices of seven European countries in response to the U.S. Steel suit. U.S. Steel's Roderick said that Japan may be next and hinted that Canada had better watch out, too.

What has happened to a country that only 25 years ago imported about 30 per cent of its steel and now has growing exports, particularly to the United States, envied profits and good morale among its workers?

Canadian steel executives and industry experts cite several reasons for their success such as cooperation between the government and industry, faster depreciation rates on equipment, continued modernization of facilities and emphasis on its own market rather than depending on exports. One of the problems of the U.S,. European and Japanese steel industries is that Third World countries, to which they once sold steel by the boatloads, are producing it themselves and don't need foreign goods.

Besides producing only about one seventh of the amount of steel that the United States produces, the Canadians are "doing extremely well because of high domestic demand," Richard Heimlich, assistant U.S. trade representative, said of the Canadians. "They're reasonably modern and efficient with a couple of exceptions. "Those exceptions are three old, small mills that have been salvaged by the Canadian government because they were located in regions with no other employment opportunities. The big three steelmakers, however, produce at least 85 per cent of Canada's steel.

For example, Canadian steel is being produced at about 95 per cent of the industry's capacity, compared with 60 per cent capacity in the United States. Canadian steel imports have hovered around 2 million tons in the past five years while imports from the United States have dropped from 608,136 tons in 1975 to 517,489 in 1978, which are the most recent figures available from the Canadian government.

Steel exports to the United States, however, have grown from 650,000 in 1975 to 2 million in 1978, according to Canadian government figures.

Heimlich added that it is also difficult for foreign steel to enter Canada because shipping on the Great Lakes is closed during the North's long winter season.

Demands for steel is relatively high in Canada because the government and industry are pushing public works and construction projects in the large unused Canadian expanse that is being developed, the AISI's Barnett said.

"The Canadian economy is at a stage to use more steel" such as in pipelines, rails and roads, Barnett said. The Canadian steel market is growing by 4 per cent to 5 per cent a year while the U.S. demand is increasing by slightly more than 1 per cent, he added.

Another explanation is that Canadian companies have good cash flow caused by a rapid depreciation schedule for equipment that permits them to reinvest more money quickly into more machinery.

Telephone giant loses $1.8B lawsuit

CHICAGO (AP) — A federal judge, in what one lawyer called the largest damage award in history, has ordered American Telephone and Telegraph Co. to pay $1.8 billion following a jury's finding that the communications giant violated U.S. antitrust laws in attempting to monopolize the long-distance telephone market.

The jury said Friday that A.T. and T. — parent company of the Bell System — violated antitrust laws in denying certain intracity telephone connections to MCI Communications Corp.

The order by U.S. District Judge John Grady came after a jury decided MCI suffered $600 million in damages when A.T. and T. denied intracity phone connections MCI needed to complete long-distance telephone calls on its own microwave network.

"This one will make the Guinness Book of Records," said A.T. and T. lawyer George Saunders, who called the verdict the largest in history.

The jury in its verdict said A.T. and T. wilfully maintained or attempted to maintain a monopoly on long-distance calls. The panel of seven women and five men began its deliberations Wednesday after hearing four months of complex testimony.

The award of $1.8 billion was based on requests for treble damages by MCI, a Washington, D.C., based microwave telecommunications company.

MCI lawyers charged that denial of the connections between 1969 and 1975 stunted the growth of their fledgling company, formed in 1968, and damaged its business prospects. MCI Chairman William McGowan said the verdict means MCI, currently serving customers in 31 U.S. cities, now is on its way to "becoming whole" and expanding its service to the entire country.

McGowan said the verdict showed the jury "will not allow the biggest corporation in the world to use its power to try and stifle its competitors in this business."

DANE WINS WORLD CORRESPONDENCE TITLE

Jorn Sloth of Denmark recently won the Eighth World Chess Correspondence Championship on tiebreaks over the Soviet Union's Vladimir Zagorovsky. The 35-year-old Sloth won the title by defeating defending Champion Yakov Estrin of the Soviet Union in the last remaining game of the tournament. The final top scores were: Sloth 11; Zagorovsky 11; N. Kosenkov, USSR 10½; R. Chasin, USSR 8½. Here's a fine effort by Sloth in the finals:

MICRO-COMPUTER CHESS

The Sargon 2.5 Micro-Computer chess board plays in a most remarkable manner. You make your move — and Sargon answers you by lighting up the square where it wants its piece to move!! You can play the machine on six different levels, fast, slow or tournament chess. You can make it solve chess problems, which it does with the greatest of ease. It's really a delight to play against. Sargon 2.5 comes with a cassette which can be replaced by another that plays "unbeatable" checkers. There is also an improved Sargon 3 cassette. Look it over — you will find it in many stores though it's not cheap. I have tested this computer program on the first four levels of the Max Lange attack. A third level game went as follows:

Bomb tied to woman for heist

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — A female kidnap victim, strapped to a device said to be a bomb by her abductor, was forced to rob a savings and loan office Friday under the threat she and the bank would be blown up unless she returned with money.

The fire department bomb squad determined there were no explosives in the device.

The woman, identified only as a La Jolla, Calif., resident in her 50s, was given an undisclosed amount of cash by tellers at a branch of Silver Gate Savings and Loan in East San Diego and left the office with the money in her purse.

The kidnapper took the woman's purse and fled in her car.

Police said the man kidnapped the woman from a parking lot.

Police said the kidnapper was in his 30s.

Pollution suit cost $785,000

SEATTLE (UPI) — The Environmental Protection Agency and the U.S. attorney's office in Seattle Friday announced the assessment of three Washington state pulp mills with civil penalties totaling $785,000, the largest in Pacific Northwest history.

While not admitting guilt, Scott Paper Co. agreed to pay $400,000 for its violations at the company's Everett mill, Georgia-Pacific agreed to pay $250,00 for its Bellingham mill and the Weyerhaeuser Corp. $135,000 for its Longview facility.

The settlement was the result of three suits filed three years ago charging none of the mills had met a 1977 water pollution cleanup deadline.

"We accepted the negotiated settlement to avoid further litigation costs and unproductive diversion of Georgia Pacific management and personnel," said GP spokesman Orman Darby, noting U.S. District Judge Walter T. McGovern had pointed out GP's "good faith" effort to comply with the law.

"The plant has in good faith consistently complied with all orders of the state and federal government," said Ben Nansen, a spokesman for Scott. "We had a legitimate concern about certain terms of the permit and exercised our rights under state law to challenge those terms."

He said the company had spent more than $28 million at the plant on water pollution control.

3 gunmen surrender

MILAN, Italy (AP) — Three gunmen who took 36 persons hostage in a bank during a foiled robbery attempt Friday afternoon surrendered to police early today after releasing their 22 remaining captives, police said.

A spokesman said two of the bandits gave themselves up without a struggle while the third shot himself in the stomach and was reported in serious condition in hospital.

U.K., France urged to act

PORT VILA, New Hebrides (Reuter) — The government of this South Pacific island chain is pressing Britain to use armed force to end a secessionist uprising, a spokesman for Chief Minister Walter Lini said Friday.

With British marines on their way to the New Hebrides, Lini's government formally requested British and French resident commissioners to declare a state of emergency empowering them to use troops to quell the rebellion.

The commissioners earlier enacted a joint regulation empowering them to declare an emergency for the first time in the 74 years Britain and France have jointly administered the New Hebrides.

But British officials said it is unlikely the marines would be sent to the troubled islands of Espiritu Santo and Tanna until at least 48 hours after their arrival in Vila, on the island of Efate.

Although Espiritu Santo is being run by rebel leader Jimmy Stevens and leading opposition politician Alexis Youlou was killed in fighting earlier this week on Tanna, the atmosphere in the capital was calm Friday.

With Espiritu Santo isolated by a government-imposed communications blackout, government officials said they could not be certain how many supporters Stevens has. But they believe he has ample arms and explosives taken from a government store during the uprising.

They said this uncertainty over rebel strength and the knowledge that they have more sophisticated weapons than the bows and arrows brandished at the start of rebellion justified the government's demands for rapid deployment of the British marines.

"We hope that Her Majesty's forces are not going to come here to play on the beach," said Lini's spokesman, John Beasant, a freelance British journalist.

The French resident commissioner, Jean-Jacques Robert, on Thursday withdrew a 60-man riot police squad from Vila.

Thatcher's milkman among 700 honored in Queen's birthday list

LONDON (UPI) — Britons who helped bring peace to Zimbabwe were rewarded today along with Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's milkman in Queen Elizabeth's birthday honors list — a twice-yearly royal "thank you" to people from all walks of life who have achieved some distinction.

Lord Soames, who was the last British governor of Rhodesia and supervised the African colony's transition to independent Zimbabwe, becomes a Companion of Honor and his wife Mary becomes a Dame of the British Empire.

Mrs. Thatcher's milkman Wally Cousins — who delivers to 10 Downing Street's doorstep every morning and has been a milkman for 50 years without one day off sick — was awarded a British Empire Medal.

Sportsmen, novelists, and industrialists great and small also were in the list of more than 700 peerages, knighthoods and other distinctions awarded.

The honors list named five new life peers, including Sir Arnold Weinstock, managing director of the General Electric Co. and Victor Matthews, chairman of Express Newsapers, publishers of the Daily Express and the London Evening Standard.

Another Fleet Street award went to Larry Lamb, editor of The Sun, Britain's largest-circulation newspaper, a tabloid notable for its daily nude pinup on page three. He becomes a knight.

The director general of the British Broadcasting Corp., Ian Trethowan, also received a knighthood.

The same honor was bestowed on Angus Wilson, 66, the novelist and lecturer who has taught at Yale, Johns Hopkins, and the University of California.

Another novelist honored was Margaret Drabble, renowned for her closely-observed sagas of life in the middle class intelligentsia. She wrote Jerusalem the Golden and The Millstone — filmed as A Touch of Love.

Comedy scriptwriters Frank Muir and Denis Norden become Commanders of the British Empire (C.B.E.) and so does Mary Whitehouse, a clean-up TV campaigner.

Guitarist John Williams, distinguished for his classics but also versed in popular music interpretations, gets the O.B.E. (Order of the British Empire).

Geoff Boycott, the Yorkshire cricketer, for years one of England's mainstay batsmen, also gets an O.B.E. And Robin Cousins, the Olympic gold medal figure skater, was awarded the M.B.E. (Member of the British Empire).

The Queen's real birthday is in April but June has better weather for such ceremonials as Trooping the Color, the famous march of the Royal guardsmen, which she was to attend today.

S.A. tightens screws for riots anniversary

Times News Services

JOHANNESBURG — South Africa has slapped a half-month ban on gatherings of more than 10 people in an attempt to halt a massive commemoration of the bloody Soweto riots of 1976 that left more than 600 people dead.

Shortly before midnight Friday, Justice Minister Alwyn Schlebusch used the Riotous Assemblies Act to issue the decree that in effect bans all gathering from today until the end of June.

The ban followed a statement to parliament by Prime Minister Pieter Botha that "no self-respecting state can afford to tolerate efforts to create anarchy," Botha said.

Police Minister Louis le Grange also issued a warning of "no-nonsense" police action if violence broke out.

The ban prevents colored (mulatto) people from attending commemorations planned for Sunday and Monday — the fourth anniversary of bloody rioting in Soweto that began June 16, 1976, and left more than 600 persons dead.

The minister's order prohibited "any gathering of a political nature" at which government action is discussed, criticized or defended or where "any protest or boycott or strike is encouraged or discussed or which is held in protest against, or in support of, or in commemoration of anything in the magisterial districts mentioned."

The government banned the gatherings in 24 areas, including Johannesburg, Cape Town, Durban, Port Elizabeth, Pretoria and other districts.

In New York City, meanwhile, the UN Security Council called unanimously Friday for South Africa to scrap immediately its apartheid policy of racial segregation, release all political prisoners and end political trials.

Western countries on the security council joined with the Third World majority to approve the anti-South African resolution, which came as non-whites in South African were agitating for equality and an end to apartheid.

Fifty African members of the United Nations asked for the debate at the urging of the African National Congress.

Pryor improving

SHERMAN OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Comedian Richard Pryor, still in critical condition, was alert and in good spirits as pain from severe burns over the upper half of his body subsided, hospital spokesmen said.

The 39-year-old Emmy and Grammy winner was taken off intravenous feeding Friday and "seems to be getting the sparkle back in his eye," burn specialist Dr. Jack Grossman said.

Pryor was taken to hospital Monday after his clothes caught fire at his Northridge home.

Police say he was burned when ether being used to make a cocaine derivative exploded. Pryor's lawyer says it was rum that caught fire.

When admitted to the facility, doctors gave him a one-in-three chance for survival.

Khomeini's guards blamed by minister

Reuters-AP

Iran's interior ministry has criticized Ayatollah Khomeini's revolutionary guards stationed at the occupied U.S. embassy in Tehran for opening fire during Thursday's bloody street riots which left five people dead and 300 injured.

Deputy Interior Minister Mostafa Mir-Salim said in a statement late Friday the guards started shooting and launching tear-gas without regard for the consequences of their action.

The rioting broke out following clashes between supporters of the radical Mujahedeen group and gangs of Moslem fundamentalists following a Mujahedeen rally in a sports stadium close to the embassy.

Mir-Salim, in a statement broadcast by Tehran radio, said the rally had been sanctioned by the authorities and security had been entrusted to unarmed police, not to the paramilitary revolutionary guards.

The statement said the guards at the embassy, believing the fighting to be a plot, "started shooting and throwing tear-gas among the people . . . without paying attention to its results."

Referring to the fundamentalist Hezbollahi (partisans of God), Mir-Salim said the opposition to the Mujahedeen was clearly organized, and an investigation is under way to determine who was behind it.

In Washington, U.S. State Secretary Edmund Muskie said the diffusion of political authority in Iran continues to be the chief obstacle blocking the release of the Americans hostages.

He told a news conference a growing awareness seems to have developed in Iran that holding the Americans does not serve Iran's national interest.

Political observers in Iran said they view the renewed rioting in Tehran as part of a breakdown of political unity among Iranian groups that co-operated after the 1979 revolution that toppled the shah.

The Mujahedeen, a key element in the anti-shah revolution, were said to have called the rally to protest against alleged intimidation of opposition groups by Khomeini's regime and the loss of human rights since the ouster of the shah 17 months ago.

VW bows on Rabbits, Dashers

DETROIT (UPI) — Volkswagen of America is offering to modify 155,000 diesel engines in Rabbit and Dasher models to prevent unwanted acceleration through burning of engine oil.

The action applies to cars built between 1977 and 1979, including 1980 models assembled to Jan. 1.

It is a response to reports of "self-acceleration" in the engines, although the firm said in a statement it doesn't believe there is a safety problem.

In some cases, high internal pressures in diesel engines can force engine lubricating oil into a cylinder, causing it to be burned along with fuel and increasing engine speed.

'Sallies' rally to mark 100th

KANSAS CITY (AP) — A marching, singing, preaching army opened the grandest gathering of its history in the United States on Friday, 12,000 strong and flags flying.

It was the National Centennial Congress of the Salvation Army, marking 100 years of its work in the country, and "Sallies," as they are called for short, filled the Municipal Auditorium with pomp, prayer and pageantry.

As a brass band played, a procession bearing the flags of 50 states moved up the aisle of the packed arena, festooned all around with blue, red and yellow bunting, the colors of the Army.

"It's a joy to be here in this land of the brave and home of the free," said Gen. Arnold Brown of London, Britain, the army's international commander.

Born in the slums of London, the Salvation Army movement on March 10, 1880, first crossed the Atlantic to the U.S., where it now includes some 5,000 officers and about 400,000 soldiers.

At the opening of the centennial congress, which runs through Monday, Arnold presented a centennial flag to Commissioner Ernest Holtz of New York, the national commander.

As he stretched it out, the crowd broke out in song, with hands clapped to the beat and small flags waved above thousands of heads.

Soviet troops fall into ambush trap

PESHAWAR, Pakistan (AP) — Afghan rebels ambushed a Soviet armored column in the hills of eastern Afghanistan, sparking a fierce ongoing battle between thousands of men on each side that has left scores of casualties, a rebel spokesman said here.

Abdul Akbarzai, a spokesman for the National Islamic Front of Afghanistan, said Friday the battle, one of the largest reported so far in the 26-month-old Afghan civil war, began Wednesday night when the Moslem rebels cut off the Soviet column as it tried to break through to a besieged Afghan army garrison.

The guerrillas sprang their trap from two sides of the Sultany Valley, about 55 kilometres west of the Pakistan border, said the spokesman for the Peshawar-based insurgent group.

He said 25 rebels were killed in the initial attack and he added that Soviet forces suffered heavier losses.

There was no independent confirmation of the account as the Afghan government has barred Western reporters from the war-torn country. But some local military experts were skeptical about the rebel claims, saying they doubted the guerrillas had the fire-power or co-ordination to maintain a sustained offensive.

Meanwhile, a report from a usually reliable Afghan source in New Delhi, India, said a rebel force punched through the security screen of Soviet and Afghan government forces guarding Kabul, the Afghan capital, and killed five Afghan policemen Tuesday night.

Artillery fire continued to echo sporadically from the hills around Kabul where the rebel forces are dug in, the source added.

A Western traveller who arrived in India on Friday from Afghanistan said Kabul is filled with rumors of villagers killing Russians and hacking their bodies to pieces.

Ohira rites fail to still politicking in streets

TOKYO (UPI) — The body of prime Minister Masayoshi Ohira was cremated today after a simple private funeral for the man whose death left his pro-American party leaderless days before crucial national elections.

Officials said the ashes of the man who ruled Japan for 18 months would be scattered following an official memorial service to be held after the June 22 national elections.

Ohira was a Christian though not a regular churchgoer.

As the two-hour funeral services unfolded at the Ohira family home, scores of politicians from both Ohira's Liberal Democratic Party and the opposition roamed the streets in sound trucks chanting election messages over loud speakers.

Ohira's widow Shigeko and their son Hiroshi officiated as some 3,000 close friends and political allies filed past the cross-draped casket to pay their last respects to Japan's first post-war prime minister to die while in office.

Ohira, who turned 70 last March, died of a massive heart attack Thursday.

Wary eye being kept on Mt. Baker

Times News Services

The eruptions of Mount St. Helens in southwest Washington have prompted a fresh look at the Mount Baker volcano in the northwest part of the state, officials said Friday.

A Mount Baker information committee, formed in 1975 after 10,778-foot peak showed increased activity, has been reactivated, it was announced.

The committee is made up of representatives of the U.S. Forest Service, Puget Sound Power & Light Co., the U.S. Geological Survey and University of Washington, said Forest Service spokesman Joe Nadolski.

Nadolski said aerial observers were sent to Mount Baker Friday and reported that steam activity in Sherman Crater on the mountain's summit appeared to be normal. The volcano regularly has been emitting some steam from fumeroles — steam vents — in the crater.

Seismologists at University of Washington reported their instruments did not indicate any increased activity at the mountain, he added.

In Vancouver, Wash., meanwhile, tourist officials are complaining the fallout of bad publicity from Mount St. Helens, which has calmed again after its third major eruption in a month, is almost as bad as the ash.

Hotel operators say their bookings are down as much as 50 per cent, mainly because travel agents can't sell complete tour packages to wary tourists.

"We're getting killed," said Gary Walker of the Seattle-King County tourist bureau. "And it's not an ash problem. It's a public relations problem.

"No one has any conception of where the mountain is. As far as they are concerned, Mount St. Helens is in the middle of Seattle."

But as industry officials protested what they call exaggerated reports of the effects of the eruptions Thursday, the volcano in southwestern part of the state spewed steam and ash again.

And scientists echoed their earlier remarks — words to pierce a tourist guide's heart — that Mount St. Helens could keep belching for years.

Pete Rowley of the U.S. Geological Survey said volcanos typically continue to erupt, but become progressively less violent.

Seismologists at the University of Washington said earthquake activity under the mountain was continuing to decline.

Halfway around the world, however, in Santa Cruz de Tenerife, in the Canary Islands, intense volcanic activity has been registered in the Spanish Canary Islands, scene of devastating eruptions in the last 500 years, the Geophysical Center of the Canary Islands reported.

The report said despite seismis activity, the risk of eruption was slight.

Grits 'sneak' taxes

Natural gas tax to cost B.C. $300M, says Clark

RICHMOND (CP) — To pay off its deficits, the federal Liberal government is trying to sneak in discriminatory taxes that will hurt British Columbians and the poor, Opposition Leader Joe Clark said Friday.

Clark, in a speech to the general meeting of the B.C. Progressive Conservative party, said the natural gas tax planned by Ottawa will cost B.C. residents $300 million, or $120 for each citizen next year.

He called the natural gas tax divisive and discriminatory because it would affect B.C. but would not be imposed on most other provinces.

"It's a nice little trick by Mr. Trudeau; Ottawa gets the money, the British Columbia government gets the blame and the B.C. consumer pays."

Clark said his party opposed a natural gas tax as a government and still opposes it. An excise tax as proposed by his government would have applied equally across the country.

The former prime minister said elimination of indexing of income tax deductions would also hurt lower-income families the most. It would mean a family with a taxable income of $10,000 would face a tax increase of 180 per cent over five years.

If indexing is removed, thousands of low-income Canadians who now pay no federal tax would find themselves paying, simply because their wages had gone up to keep pace with inflation.

Yet families with income of $40,000 would face increases of only 31 per cent.

He said he knew British Columbians were frustrated by an inability to make their vote count in the last federal election — no government MPs were elected west of Manitoba.

Today, delegates were to debate a change to the B.C. party constitution which would create separate federal and provincial memberships.

Some Tories have been hostile or lukewarm toward efforts to rebuild the party provincially, fearing it might split the private enterprise vote and help elect a New Democratic Party government in B.C.

The B.C. party, which now has no leader and a $60,000 debt, was wiped out in the 1979 provincial election.

SEARCH LIGHT for Fort Rodd arrived Friday but it won't be used for it's original task, searching for enemy ships and planes. The light had been stored in Ottawa awaiting completion of restoration work on Fisgard Lighthouse at the national historic park in Colwood. The light, one of the original type installed at the fort, was first used about 40 years ago.

Fishing trip fatal for boy

The body of a seven-year-old boy who drowned in Langford Lake Friday night was recovered by Colwood RCMP early this morning.

A police spokesman said the boy left his home on Leigh Road near the lake at 6:30 p.m. to go fishing.

His mother grew worried when he didn't return home and, after a frantic search, called police at 10:10 p.m.

Police located the boy's body at 1:30 a.m. in four to five feet of water beside a pier near the public boat launching site at the south end of the lake.

Police said the boy was a non-swimmer.

Police are withholding the boy's name pending notification of his father who is out of town working in the Parksville area.

Pension protest rally Monday

The public sector employees' protest of proposed pension changes storms into Victoria Monday, leaving cancelled ferry runs, closed liquor stores and limited government service in its wake.

The B.C. Government Employees Union (BCGEU) expects at least 90 per cent of its 10,000 members in the city will walk off the job in the afternoon.

About 4,000 are expected to take part in a rally which will begin at 1 p.m. in Centennial Square and wind up on the legislative lawns.

However, others who would be affected by the changes, including municipal employees - members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees - and teachers, will not be participating in an organized manner.

Representatives of local teachers' associations will take part in the rally but the teachers will remain in the classroom.

They have been asked to express their concerns in letters to the government.

The Victoria rally, the last in a series which began May 30, will coincide with the resumption of the current legislative session after a week's break.

Ferry workers at Swartz Bay will hold study sessions during the day raising havoc with the daily schedule.

The B.C. Ferry Corp. gives the following breakdown of what to expect:

— The Tsawwassen terminal will be closed from about 10 a.m. until 2 p.m.;

— The 11 a.m., 11:45 a.m., noon, 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. sailings from Swartz Bay to Tsawwassen will be cancelled;

— The 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. sailings from Tsawwassen

Do or die on coal deal today

RICHMOND (CP) — The fate of a multi-million dollar coal deal between British Columbia and Japan rests in the hands of the provincial cabinet.

The cabinet was meeting in special session today to consider a financing offer from the federal government for rail lines to carry northeastern B.C. metallurgical coal to port at Prince Rupert for export to Japan.

Japanese coal companies have set Sunday as a deadline for a firm price for B.C. coal in a 10-to-15-year deal.

Talks between federal and provincial cabinet ministers in Ottawa broke off after 10 hours Friday when B.C. Economic Development Minister Don Phillips said the federal proposals must be discussed by provincial cabinet, Ray Perrault, government leader in the Senate, said at a news conference.

Perrault said he was surprised by the turn-around because Phillips had given him the impression he was empowered to act for B.C.

Perrault said the Ottawa session ended with "an agreement hammered out.

B.C. government sources now say there was no firm agreement and Perrault jumped the gun.

Woodward's video pitch

VANCOUVER (CP) — Woodward's employees throughout B.C. are being shown a video-taped message from board chairman C. N. (Chunky) Woodward which says the department store could be destroyed if it gives in to demands by striking food floor employees in Victoria.

"We would become noncompetitive and that would threaten the survival of the food floors and the jobs of over 1,200 food floor employees in B.C. and indirectly the survival of the whole company," Woodward said on the tape.

Any company that has tried to provide significantly higher wages and benefits than its competitors has soon gone out of business, he said.

"He's talking about Apocalypse Now when all we want is 20-minute rest periods and staff discounts," countered Bryan Denton, secretary-treasurer of the Retail Clerks Union, local 1518, which went on strike two weeks ago after negotiations for a first contract broke down.

Woodward's has offered the Victoria clerks the same contract that covers workers in other major supermarket chains, but it does not include the 20-minute breaks or the discount.

The union is also seeking to achieve seniority for part-time employees. Three-quarters of the staff work fewer than 25 hours a week and cannot enjoy all fringe benefits, Denton said.

Pros fined going for 'green'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Vancouver-area golfers have paid at least half a million dollars extra for equipment because golf professionals conspired to keep prices up, B.C. Supreme Court Justice Thomas Berger said Friday.

He made the comment in imposing fines of $40,000 on the Canadian Professional Golfers Association and $10,000 on its B.C. branch.

The two associations pleaded guilty to conspiring to maintain the prices of top lines of golf clubs and balls — a violation of the Combines Investigation Act.

"The Crown estimates that as a result of the scheme by the two associations, Lower Mainland golfers paid a million dollars more than they would have under free competition," Justice Berger said.

"It is, of course, impossible to know precisely at this stage what the losses were, but I think it fair to say they were at least half a million dollars."

He said that the defence had agreed to the penalties, which might have been heavier except that the practice ended three years ago. The offences occurred in the 10 years prior to December 1977.

"Golf may be only a game, but it was real money that was obtained from the public for a decade," the judge said.

Toronto lawyer William McMurtry, acting for the golfers, argued there was no intention on the part of the pros to break the law.

CPGA members are golf professionals making on average about $19,500 a year from salary and instructional fees and equipment sales.

Crown counsel P. W. Halprin told the judge that estimates of the retail sales of pro line golf equipment in 1976 in the Vancouver area totalled almost $2 million.

Halprin said the association restricted advertising by members and under threat of discipline, suspension and expulsion under the bylaws prevented or lessened competition.

Students forge world-wide radio link

By NORMAN GIDNEY

A project of the downtown Victoria Kiwanis club will link the students of Pearson College this fall by ham radio with their relatives and friends in their native countries around the world.

First suggested by newborn ham Rev. Bert King of Metropolitan United Church, the idea was enthusiastically endorsed by the Kiwanis who will pay for the $6,000 worth of equipment needed to establish a ham station at Pedder Bay.

A 70-foot tower will be erected on the hill behind the college and a room has been set aside in the Max Bell auditorium to house the equipment.

"It will be operating in the fall," Rev. King said in an interview. Victoria ham radio operators have volunteered to put together the equipment and Chas Ryan, a local Department of Communications inspector, has agreed to sponsor the group.

The students even have their call letters reserved already — VE7LPC, for Lester Pearson College.

It's more than just a grown-up CB radio rig which the Kiwanis are providing for Pearson College. Students will have to meet the strict Canadian government regulations for ham radio operators.

They must learn Morse code and be able to transmit and receive at a rate of 10 words per minute without mistakes. Prospective hams must also write exams in theory and regulations and achieve 70 per cent or better.

There's a technical problem in that only Canadian citizens may receive ham radio licences, but there are Canadians among the student body at Pearson College and director Jack Matthews will also take the ham operator's course. Victoria ham operators will give instruction at Pearson College, so the station can be used under their supervision.

The requirements sound onerous, but Rev. King said he earned his licence in six months, getting up at six o'clock every morning to fit in study time.

Pearson College hopes to link up with the other two world colleges affiliated with the Pedder Bay school. Matthews said he's just learned Atlantic College in Wales is about to get a ham station.

Rev. King said the Kiwanis will try to get a service club in Singapore to sponsor a similar project for the college there.

The idea grew out of a Christmas visit to the King home by a Pearson College student. Rafael Niakra of Kembi, Papua-New Guinea, stayed the holidays with the Kings. Rev. King showed him his ham set.

"He got interested in it," he said. Niakra wrote home to learn there was a ham operator in his hometown, who replied with details about times and frequencies he operated. King got fellow Victoria ham George Bamfield to listen in one day.

Bamfield found no trouble picking him up. He didn't break in to talk, but it would have been a simple step to contact him and patch him through on a telephone hookup at this end to one of the Pearson College students.

"I got to thinking, wouldn't it be interesting to have a ham radio station at Pearson College, with 200 students from all over the world?"

Thus was born the Kiwanis project.

College director Jack Matthews said Pearson students are looking forward to the fall when the station will be set up. He said some of the physics students there could probably take their exams after only a month of instruction, which would allow them on the two-metre band.

Use of the 10-metre band which carries around the world requires another four to six months use of Morse.

Rev. King, 560 Beace Drive, became interested in ham radio because he wanted a challenging but out-of-the-ordinary hobby. Ham radio has more than met his expectations.

"I just got my licence last October. I wanted to learn something completely different."

It's opened up a whole new world and provided a different outlook on things. Ham radio has shrunk the globe for Rev. King and introduced him to a technology most people think of as glorified Citizen's Band radio.

Most hams would sneer at this comparison; they consider ham radio the Cadillac of CB. They are very much two different things.

A few weeks ago Rev. King was listening to someone in Alert, 450 miles from the North Pole, talking to a base in Antarctica. Another night he talked with a ham in Johannesburg, "just as clearly as I'm talking to you now."

There's tremendous clarity and none of the staticky clutter CBers are subject to. The rules of the air also enforce considerably more politeness. One obcene word and a ham can lose his licence, Rev. King said.

Advances in technology by the Japanese have led to the development of a miniature ham set that is a portable, battery-operated hand held unit no bigger than a walkie-talkie.

Biker still unconscious from flight after crash

A 38-year-old Victoria man remains unconscious in Royal Jubilee Hospital today with severe head injuries he received when his motorcycle collided with a car in the 1000-block Caledonia Friday night.

City police said Albert James Wright of 1728 Lee Street was hurled about 16 metres through the air following the rear-end collision with a car driven by John Morgan of 2938 Graham.

A spokesman said Morgan had stopped to let another car pull out of a parking space when the mishap occurred at 8:18 p.m.

When police arrived Wright was lying face-down on the sidewalk near the Royal Athletic Park box office with two persons attempting to administer first aid to him.

Officers were unable to find a helmet and presume Wright was not wearing one.

Wright was taken to Victoria General and later transferred to RJH for a brain scan.

In other accidents, about $13,000 damage was done in a six-vehicle smashup at Craigflower and Tillicum at 1:30 p.m. Friday.

Esquimalt police said all of the cars were eastbound on Craigflower when a car collided into the rear-end of the one in front, pushing it ahead into another and so on in a chain-reaction.

Two persons received minor injuries.

The driver of the first car was taken into custody and was to appear in provincial court today charged with impaired driving.

Sooke museum expands

Sooke Museum will unveil three new exhibits Sunday including one of the only operating steam donkey engines on Vancouver Island and a blacksmith shop.

Opening ceremonies will be held at 2 p.m. at the museum grounds off Sooke Road with Yorke Edwards from the Provincial Museum and MP Jim Manly on hand.

The donkey engine was restored by the Sooke Region Historical Society whcih also operates the museum. The engine was built in 1911 and used in the Sooke area for pulling logs.

A blacksmith will be on hand Sunday and other weekends throughout the summer.

The third new exhibit is the original lens from the Sheringham Point Lighthouse near Sooke.

The museum invites anyone interested in the new exhibits to attend the opening and a salmon barbecue

Saanich police reach tentative agreement

Saanich police reached a tentative agreement on grievances with the police board in the early hours of this morning.

Mayor Mel Couvelier said after the long Labor Relations Board negotiating session finished that an agreement had been reached but no details would be announced until after both sides had an opportunity to present the details to their members.

The police board will meet Monday, said Couvelier, probably at an in-camera session to consider the agreement.

The police association will meet Tuesday.

The LRB hearing was requested by Couvelier Thursday following an hour long walk-out Wednesday by police.

The walk-out was held to protest the board's delays in dealing with four long-standing grievances of the police, said association representative Sergeant Phil Jamieson.

The hearing was called to deal with the main grievance: a question of whether police members are required to fill in for communication operators.

The police board insisted the association provide a member to man the communication system when the regular communication operators were on breaks or vacation and illness leaves.

The police association objected, saying the matter had been resolved at a LRB hearing last year when the decision was that police members are not part of the communication staff.

Escaped con nabbed

Shawnigan Lake and Duncan RCMP have recaptured a 20-year-old prison escaper who has been at large from the Slave Lake camp near Mission since May 2.

A Duncan RCMP spokesman said Christopher Joe Boivin was nabbed as he was returning to a hidden camp site at the end of Mile End Road in Cobble Hill early Friday morning.

Several officers, including the Colwood RCMP tracking dog-team, had lain in wait for the escaper, wanted on a Canada-wide warrant, after an informant told police Boivin was living in the area.

The arrest was made without incident.

The spokesman said Boivin has been charged with a June 5 breakin at the Dobson apartments in Duncan in which $150 cash was stolen.

Boivin is scheduled to appear in court in Duncan on Monday.

Injunction hearing set

The B.C. Supreme Court will deal Tuesday with a B.C. Hydro request for an injunction to stop Carl Rising-Moore of Powell River protesting the Cheekye-Dunsmuir power project.

Hydro wanted the hearing Friday but it was delayed to allow Rising-Moore time to prepare a defence.

Attack on girlfriend nets 8 years prison

A 24-year-old Malaysian student was sentenced in Victoria county court Friday to a total of eight years in penitentiary for attempted murder and related offences involving his former girlfriend Nov. 8.

Judge Frederick Melvin, in sentencing Kian Hock Koh, also known as Fabian Koh, said it was a very, very brutal attack on Nancetta Lorraine Kobe, 20, which cried out for a considerable period of imprisonment to reflect the court's repugnance.

Melvin found Koh guilty of attempted murder and sentenced him to six years and guilty of using a firearm while attempting to murder her and added two years. Koh received two years concurrent on each of two other offences, possession of a rifle and possession of a knife for a purpose dangerous to the public peace.

He said Koh was fortunate that he did not find himself guilty of murder because Kobe suffered a loss of 40 per cent of her blood.

Melvin said he considered, in sentencing Koh, the emotion-charged background, rehabilitation, deterennce of him and others, his reactive depression and seven months in custody as well as the manner in which the attack was carried out.

This, he said in convicting Koh on all four counts in the indictment, involved obtaining a single-shot .22-calibre rifle, sitting in his car with it, threatening to shoot her, following her into a Cook Street apartment, firing twice, necessitating reloading, injuring her in the back and mouth, leaving the scene and returning with a knife and inflicting neck wounds and then fleeing when interrupted, cleaning himself up and discarding the weapons.

Melvin dismissed three psychiatric-psychological grounds of defence saying Koh was sane at the time of the offences and he acted intentionally and meant to cause death to Kobe or meant to cause bodily harm and was reckless whether death occurred or not.

Defence counsel Dermod Owen-Flood said outside court he is considering an appeal of both the verdicts and the sentence.

In his summation, Crown counsel Wayne Smith said the injuries were extremely serious and only the miraculous intervention by passer-by Darryl Scott Alsbrook, 37, a medic in Viet Nam, saved her life. He applied pressure to her slashed throat to reduce the bleeding.

He said there was planning and deliberation and it was a brutal and cowardly act.

Owen-Flood said Koh was a young, very dependent person who was certainly mentally upset and he asked for a sentence in the lower range of probation to life which would allow him to return to his home country.

He said Koh has to be kept in protective custody in prison because he is suicidal as a result of his mental condition and because he would be beaten and otherwise abused by prisoners.

ANNUAL SHOW of the Vancouver Island Ceramic Association draws smiles from Belinda Seal, 7, and Cara Seal, 6, of 3960 Arlene Place, after early round of judging at the Esquimalt Sports Centre. The girls picked Miss Piggy as their favorite. The show continues until 7 p.m. tonight and runs from noon to 6 p.m. Sunday. The ceramic frog on page one is by Sharon Roberts.

No trace of safe

City police have drawn a blank in their search for a safe stolen from the Little Gem Grocery, 148 Superior overnight Thursday.

The safe, an older black model measuring 2½-feet by two feet by two feet and weighing about 350 pounds contained 84 postal money orders, a large number of stamps, $140 in silver, and an undetermined amount in bills.

The thieves also got away with a number of lottery tickets kept in a drawer in another part of the store's office, $70 cash in an envelope in the same drawer, and two postal imprinter plates for the money orders.

Entry was gained through a window at the rear of the store. A dolly was used to cart away the safe. It was found on Kingston Street where police believe the thieves loaded the safe into a car.

The stolen money orders have serial numbers in sequence from 365867517-600 inclusive. Most of the lottery ticket numbers are also recorded, except for some Western tickets whose last three numbers won in the June 11 draw and which had been turned in for five free tickets. Those tickets could be used again for free tickets, police said.
